MAKES THREAT TO DECLARE WAR

Unless Former King Is Expelled from Hungary.

CZECHO-SLOVAKIA ISSUES ULTIMATUM

Switzerland Angered by Action of Charles.

It Is Claimed He Abuses Asylum Provided Him by the Swiss. A Military Dictatorship in West Hungary Reported.

New York, March 31.—The sudden and dramatic appearance in Hungary of Charles, former emperor-king of the old Austro-Hungarian empire, brought Europe to the brink of a new war, today.

The "little entente"—Czecho-Slovakia, Rumania and Jugo-Slavia—threatens to go to war against Hungary, unless Charles is expelled at once. Jugo-Slavia, it is reported in Paris, has already begun to mass troops for a campaign.

The Royalists have declared a military dictatorship in west Hungary. Count Sigray has been appointed dictator. Colonel Lehar is in command of the troops and Charles has been proclaimed head of the civil administration. It was reported that all the troops in that section of Hungary had gone over to the Royalists.

Charles' return to Hungary was to be the signal for a Monarchist uprising and the consequent restoration of the Hapsburgs to the Hungarian throne in defiance of the allies.

The conflicting news that came out of Vienna, Berlin and Hungary, today, made it difficult to forecast the outcome, but there were strong indications that the coup was already doomed to failure.

Charles, at last reports, was in Steinamanger, surrounded by Loyalist supporters. At least a portion of the Hungarian army was reported to have gone over to the Monarchists. The Vienna correspondent of the Berlin Morger Post reported that 30,000 troops were ready to march upon Budapest today to restore the monarchy. Charles and Count Andrassy were said to have sent an ultimatum to Budapest demanding that the present Hungarian regime, headed by Admiral Horthy, make way for the restoration of the monarchy at once.

No Decisive Action.

So far as revealed, the allies have taken no decisive action, relying upon the Hungarian and Austrian governments to put down the Royalist movement.

The role of Admiral Horthy, the Hungarian regent, is doubtful. He has always been accused of fealty to the Monarchist cause, but advices from Vienna within the past twenty-four hours, picture him as opposing the Royalist coup and promising the speedy expulsion of Charles from the country. On the other hand, Vienna despatches said that if the Monarchists were victorious, Admiral Horthy was to be made commander-in-chief of the Monarchist army.

With southeastern Europe in turmoil over the Hungarian developments, the allied chancelleries are keeping a vigilant eye upon the Monarchists in Germany and the movements of the fugitive Hohenzollern family in Holland.

The fortunes of the two old Imperial families—the Hapsburgs and the Hohenzollerns—were so closely intertwined that it was regarded as certain that a royal success in Hungary would exercise powerful influence upon the Hohenzollern adherents in Germany, especially at this time, when Germany is torn with strife between the "Reds" and the government.

The next twenty-four hours should show whether Charles has any chance of success in his venture for the Hungarian throne, or whether he will become a modern Napoleon in exile.

Massing Troops.

Paris, March 31.—Jugo-Slavia has begun to concentrate troops for war against Hungary, unless Charles is expelled at once, according to advices from Budapest, today. Admiral Horthy, the Hungarian regent, was reported to have promised the diplomatic envoys of Czecho-Slovakia, Roumania and Jugo-Slavia that Charles will be expelled immediately.

Threatens War.

Berlin, March 31.—Czecho-Slovakia is threatening to go to war

PENNSYLVANIA PLANS WAGE CUT

Makes Proposal for 35,000 Workers Today.

A WAGE-REDUCTION CONFERENCE HELD

General Managers Gather in Pittsburgh—Cuts from Sixteen Per Cent. Up.

Pittsburgh, March 31.—A wage cut averging from sixteen to twenty-five per cent. was, today, proposed by the Pennsylvania railroad for its 35,000 maintenance-of-way employes and unskilled labor, at the first wage-reduction conference with the employes held by the general managers of the company, in Moose temple here. The wage cuts proposed are: Common labor, now receiving 48 1-2 cents an hour, proposed to be reduced to 37 1-2 cents an hour, with different rates of pay in different classification territory.

All day-rate employes, except track and similiar labor, now receiving $5.50 to $6.50 a day, to be reduced one dollar a day.

Monthly men, such as foremen, now receiving $110 to $200 a month proposed to be reduced $25 a month.

NARCOTICS BROUGHT INTO THE COUNTRY

Gigantic System of Smuggling Unearthed in New York.

New York, March 31.—Authorities in charge of the enforcement of anti-drug laws were busy, today, pursuing clues which may lead to the discovery of a widespread system of smuggling narcotics from Germany into this country. The first inkling that international "dope" smugglers were at work again came with a spectacular raid, last night, on a Brooklyn grocery store, which netted $250,000 worth of heroin and cocaine shipped here from Germany by way of Italy, Spain and South America. Dr. Carleton Simon, in charge of the narcotic division of the police department, undertook the raid, aided by half a dozen detectives. Five men and a woman were arrested.

Secret information led Dr. Simon, some weeks ago, to detail two detectives to "get on the inside" of the alleged smuggling plot. They dressed and posed as seamen and mingled with suspicious people at the waterfront, thus gathering valuable data which led to the raid.

Some of the narcotics were hidden in catsup bottles.

GREAT BRITAIN FACES TROUBLE

Is on the Eve of a New Labor War, It Appears.

A NATIONAL COAL STRIKE IS PLANNED

General Walkout of Miners Now Seems Unavoidable.

Mine Owners Announce Wage Reduction and Miners Refuse To Accept—Campaign To Nationalize Mines Near.

London, March 31.—Great Britain is on the eve of a new labor war.

A national coal strike, effective tomorrow night, seems inevitable, today. The press warned the public that a general walkout of the miners appeared to be unavoidable.

The executive committee of the Federation of Miners held a meeting, this morning, but no statement was issued. Later, the committeemen went to Unity house to confer with representatives of the other two branches of the Triple alliance—the railway men and the transport workers.

The mines which have been operated under government control and government subsidy since the war, are to be turned back to the private owners, tomorrow. Anticipating this action, the mine owners announced wage reductions.

The miners refused to accept the wage cuts and threatened to strike if they were put into effect.

The operators contend that the wages of the miners have been raised to such a point that under private ownership the collieries would be operated at a loss. They point out that the operating deficit, last month, was about $35,000,000. It was proposed that eighty per cent. of the gross receipts be turned over to the miners in the form of wages, but the men contend that this would not give them a living wage.

It is probable that the campaign for nationalization of the coal mines will be revived. This has been a vital problem in the British labor situation for more than two years.

Sir Robert Horne, president of the board of trade has appealed to the men not to take any hasty action until all avenues of arbitration are explored.

DRUGGISTS GET INSTRUCTIONS

New Order Is Issued by Federal Revenue Chief.

THE WITHDRAWAL OF LIQUORS FROM BOND

Retail Druggists Can Meet All Reasonable Demands.

Announced Druggists Are Flooded with Prescriptions for Sick Which They Are Unable To Fill at This Time.

Washington, March 31.—Wine and whisky for the sick can now be withdrawn by retail druggists, from bonded warehouses, to meet all reasonable demands. Orders were issued by Revenue Commissioner Williams, today, authorizing druggists, beginning tomorrow, to withdraw in such amounts as are needed to meet their requirements. The new instructions modify an order, issued January 28, limiting withdrawls by druggists to five cases of liquor on a single withdrawl.

Druggists, hereafter, will be permitted to withdraw up to 100 gallons of whisky and 100 gallons of wine every three months. They will be allowed to withdraw in larger amounts, Commissioner Williams directed, by furnishing satisfactory proof with the prohibition directors in their districts that larger quantities are necessary to meet their trade demands.

Commissioner Williams' order affecting withdrawls of wine is the first step taken by the internal revenue bureau to "liberalize" the "dry" regulations, since the opinion of former Attorney General Palmer was issued, placing wine and beer officially in the status of whisky for medicinal purposes.

Removal of the restrictions as to wine as well as whisky was decided upon as a result of demands from all parts of the country from both retail and wholesale druggists for early relaxation of the rules previously in force to meet heavy demands from the public. Since Palmer's opinion, the druggists have been literally swamped with appeals to supply wine, beer and whisky upon physicians' prescriptions, officials declared.

Sale of Wine.

Officials declared that the sale of wine by retail druggists will not be restricted, as in the case of whisky. Under the law, as it now stands, one pint of liquor only can be sold upon a doctor's prescription. In the case of wine, however, the physician's judgment prevails and the amount he specifies as necessary for a patient can be sold by druggists. This procedure will be followed until further regulations are drafted governing beer as well as wine for medicinal purposes.

Commissioner Williams said that while it will be necessary eventually for the bureau to place some limit upon the amount of wine and beer that can be prescribed at one time, this phase of the matter will be left for decision to his successor, soon to be named.

Heavy demands are being made upon druggists throughout the country to supply beer for medicinal purposes, according to reports to Commissioner Williams. There also is a large number of inquiries from brewers, indicating their readiness to supply trade demands if new permits are authorized. The beer end of the problem is regarded by "dry" law chiefs as the most difficult part of the work made necessary by Palmer's ruling. The question of what restrictions shall be placed upon breweries making medicinal beer, is now the subject of discussion. Decision upon the question in the near future is not expected.

GREEK ARMY IN A BIG ADVANCE

Engaging Turk Nationalists on Anatolian Front.

VICTORIOUS FORCES GET FIRST OBJECTIVE

An Advance of Seventy-Five Miles Reported.

Turkish Nationalist Officers Explain That Turks Are Outnumbered — Turkish Army Is Still Fighting Hard.

Constantinople, March 30. — [Through London, March 31.]—The Greek army engaging the Turkish Nationalists on the Anatolian front has advanced seventy-five miles since the offensive was opened.

The Greek offensive, as originally planned, was successfully terminated, Tuesday night, according to despatches received at allied headquarters, today, from the theater of hostilities.

The Turkish Nationalist leaders explain that their retirement eastward was made necessary by the numerical superiority of the Greeks. According to the Nationalists, it was their plan of strategy to reduce the strength of the advance Greek army by retiring, knowing that the Greeks would have to leave considerable forces in the rear to garrison captured territory and to defend the lines of communication with base at Smyrna.

It is declared by the Nationalists that "the situation is unchanged," since the Turkish army is still intact and is in a better position to offer resistance since it is much nearer its base of supplies.

The Turks claim that their situation, from a military viewpoint, is improved, if anything.

It is not known here whether the Greeks plan another advance. If so, they must bring up fresh supplies from their base. The Turks claim they are prepared to meet a renewal of the offensive, "but will not accept battle until conditions are equalized."

UNTANGLING OF THE RAIL SNARL

President Harding Takes Up a Difficult Task.

CONFERENCES HELD TOUCHING SITUATION

Reduction of Rail Rates and Wages Considered.

Views of Chairmen of Two Boards Secured—Former Premier Viviani Makes Purpose of Mission Known.

Washington, March 31.—President Harding today took up the difficult task of untangling the railroad snarl.

The president conferred with Judge R. M. Barton, chairman of the railroad labor board, and Chairman Clark, of the interstate commerce commission. With these two officials, the president planned to make a thorough study of the present railroad situation.

One of the first questions which the president is understood to have taken up is that of reduction of wages for railroad employes and reduction of freight and passenger rates for the railroads, seeking the views of the two chairmen on these questions.

Railroad executives are understood to have already laid before the president extensive arguments showing the necessity for reduction of wages and the president desires data from Judge Barton as to the views of the railroad board on this subject. Chairman Clark is understood to be prepared to outline the situation with regard to possibility of rate reduction.

Supplementing his conferences, which began today, with government officials on the transportation crisis, President Harding will arrange meetings here with representatives of the railway labor brotherhoods and the railroad presidents, according to information tonight.

He is expected to call committees from each group to Washington within the next few days.

Calls at White House.

Washington, March 31.—Former Premier Viviani of France, sent here as an envoy extraordinary, lifted the veil of secrecy from his mission in long conferences with President Harding and Secretary of State Hughes.

It developed that France is more interested in American aid in reparations collection from Germany than in America's league membership.

No official statement divulging the talk taken by the French envoy was issued at the White House, the state department or the Shoreham hotel, where the mission is quartered. The story of reparations problems furnishing the background for the mission gained strength and was confirmed to this extent by the envoy's secretary, Dr. Marcel Knecht:

"Anything relative to the conferences at the state department and the White House will be made public if ever, by the state department and the White House. However, I can tell you that France at this time is much more interested in the reparations settlement than in problems directly related to the league of nations. We recognize the power America might exercise in that settlement."

Members of the senate foreign relations committee, whose chairman, Senator Lodge, conferred with the president ahead of Viviani's arrival, learned of the envoy's hope of getting this country's aid in dealing with Germany.

The only formal announcement was one issued at the White House after the conference with President Harding, which said that M. Viviani "called to pay the compliments and offer the good wishes of the president of France to the president," and added that he "emphasized the desire of France to continue the friendship between the two republics and expressed gratitude to America for the great things done since his previous visit." Formal announcement was also made that President Harding would give a dinner at the White House in honor of M. Viviani's visit April 6.

A DEADLOCK OVER WAGE AND OPEN SHOP

Cleveland Railway and Employes in Struggle.

Cleveland, March 31.—A deadlock over the wage and open-shop issue impends between the Cleveland railway and its 3,400 employes, following the rejection by President John J. Stanley, of the street railway company, of the proposal made by the employes, that the entire dispute be referred to a committee of street railways.

"Unless a definite answer is returned to my request within a short time, I will take steps to submit the entire matter to the conciliation board provided in the agreement," President John A. declared.

The company has proposed a reduction of twenty per cent. in compensation and a return to the open shop principle in employment of men.

FOUR CHILDREN KILLED IN PLAY

Caught Beneath Tons of Sand in Akron.

FIFTH CHILD IS RESCUED ALIVE

Coroner Finds Deaths Are Due Solely to Accident—No Blame Attached to Any Person.

Akron, March 31.—Joe Zubovich, seven; Benny Sandrine, eight; Nick Lasovich, six; and John Dudich, nine, are dead and May Ro Ring, four, is seriously injured as a result of a sandbank cave-in, late last evening.

According to the police, the five children were playing at the cement plant of Anderson & Whipple company, Newton street, when, in a spirit of daring, they attempted to race to determine as to who could climb the fifty feet to the top of a sandbank in the quickest time. When half-way up the incline, the sand began to slide. Desperately the children attempted to stop it, but their efforts were futile.

At the outset, the slide was gradual, but the efforts of the children to make for a safe place accentuated the movement and directly the mass started forward rapidly and engulfed the children. Finger prints indicate the struggle they made to escape the fifteen tons of sand as it began to engulf them.

The four boys were completely buried, while the girl, slightly covered, was easily extricated in an unconscious condition.

Corner Kent said that death was due to suffocation. No blame has been attached by the police, who claim the affair accidental.

AN IMPRESSIVE SERVICE TODAY

When Late Cardinal Gibbons Is Laid to Rest.

GREAT ASSEMBLAGE FILLS CATHEDRAL

Distinguished Churchmen and Laymen Are in Attendance at Funeral in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Maryland, March 31.—In a crypt beneath the high altar of the ancient mother cathedral church, had by the baptismal font to which his parents brought him eighty-seven years ago, James Cardinal Gibbons, priest, prelate, patriot and dean of Cardinals in the Roman Catholic church, was laid to his long rest, today.

His entombment with his predecessors in the archepiscopal office—among them John Carroll friend of Washington and of Franklin—came at the close of a requiem, solemn with the liturgy which has grown up throughout the centuries and perfect in every detail, from the processional which ushered in the ceremony, to the recessional which moved out of the church after the sepulchre had been closed with a marble slab.

At the conclusion of the solemn service in the cathedral proper, attended by the largest and most notable assemblage of ecclesiastics ever gathered together in America, there was a brief pause. The pallbearers carried the catafalque to its niche in the crypt beneath the chancel. A stillness, deeper than all that had gone before, pervaded the vast edifice and was broken only when the voice of Bishop Corrigan, auxiliary to the dead cardinal, and now administrator of the archdiocese, was heard intoning the final prayers for the repose of the dead prelate.

A Great Churchman.

A great churchman and a great American had gone to his long sleep.

In the city of his birth, his long life had come to its worthy close and he found his repose within the walls of the cathedral where he not only was baptized, but where also he was raised to the priesthood, where he was consecrated as bishop and archbishop and where for thirty-five years he has presided as a prince of the church.

Throughout the impressive ceremony, the delicately fragile body of the venerable dead reposed on a purple catafalque, vested as a bishop, for the celebration of mass. Upon his head was the mitre and about his slight shoulders fell the purple chausable. Below the chausable showed the red of the cardinalate. His feet were encased in soft purple slippers and at the foot of the bier lay the ceremonial red hat which now will be suspended above the tomb of the dead prelate, there to hang until disintegrated by the hand of time. On either side of the catafalque burned three candles, while a seven-branched candelabrum of sacred significance stood at the head.

The pontifical mass of requiem began at 10 o'clock. Long before that hour, throngs surrounded the cathedral. The last solemn requiem for the dead cardinal was attended chiefly by the hierachy and priests of America and the distinguished representatives of municipal, state and national governments, as well as by members of the diplomatic corps and their staffs, from Washington. Early services had been especially set aside for the children of the archdiocese, the men and women of the religious orders and for the laity.

Funeral March.

Although the seating capacity of the cathedral is great, it would have afforded accommodation for only a small fraction of the throng which assembled outside long before the hour set for the services.

Up the broad aisle of the cathedral to the sanctuary, with its sable-draped altar, past the bier of the dead churchman, the long procession wended its way as the great organ pealed the solemn tones of the funeral march.

First came the cross-bearer, followed by the seminarians from St Mary's who later sang the Gregorian chants which Cardinal Gibbons had done so much to revive. Then came the priests from the Baltimore archdiocese, as well as the clergy from afar—hundreds of them—all wearing the distinctive garb of their spiritual affiliation.

There were brown-robed and black-robed Franciscans, as well as Franciscans of the Capuchin order, Benedictines in black, Dominicans in white and then Jesuits in black with leather cinctures and Redemptorists Oblats, Marists and priests of the Holy Cross, also in solemn black. Carmelites in brown and white were followed by Paulists in black, with leather girdles, each with a crucifix pressed to his breast. After them came Augustinians and Norbertines from the Catholic universities, Washington, all garbed in shining white.

A touch of brilliancy was added to the scene when scores of monsignori, each attired in flowing purple robes and wearing a purple barretta, moved next toward the catafalque where lay the honored dead. Then came the archbishops and bishops, four-score of them—gorgeous in mitre and cope—followed by the officers of the requiem mass. The celebrant of the mass was the Most Rev. John Bonzano, D. D., apostolic delegate and thus the representative of the Pope, himself.

Cathedral Hushed.

The solemnity without the cathedral was as hushed and impressive as the ceremonies within. Especially impressive was the calm which brooded over the city at 10 o'clock the hour set for the beginning of the funeral mass. In accordance with a proclamation of the mayor, there was a five-minute suspension of work. During that period, street traffic was at a standstill and there was a general cessation of activity. Governor Ritchie, also, in a proclamation to the state of Maryland, requested a one-minute suspension of all activities, as a mark of grateful recognition of Cardinal Gibbons' life and work.

Archbishop Bonzano was attended by two deacons of honor and then came the deacon of the mass, the sub-deacon and the masters of ceremonies. At the very end of the long procession which made its way through the nave, heavily draped with black and purple, were the ranking members of the hierarchy in America—Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston, senior cardinal in the United States and Cardinal Begin, of Quebec, ranking prelate in the Dominion of Canada. Each wore, besides cardinal red denoting membership in the sacred college, the mitre and heavily brocaded cope of rare splendor.

Among the distinguished laymen noted in the great assembly were the mayor and city officials of Baltimore, clergymen of many denominations, the governor of Maryland and his staff; James A. Flaherty, supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus; Rene Viviani, envoy extraordinary to the United States and former premier of France; the French ambassador, Jules J. Jusserand; the Italian ambassador, Vittori Rolandi Ricci; the Belgian ambassador, the Spanish ambassador; representatives of the British embassy and of the Polish legation and other members of the diplomatic corps and government officials who came over from Washington for the funeral.

The funeral sermon was preached by the Most Rev. J. J. Glennon, archbishop of St. Louis. Just before the body was carried to the crypt, the final absolution was pronounced by Archbishop Bonzano and four other bishops. The ceremonies of committal were simple and occupied but a few minutes.

Cardinal Gibbons' only brother, John J. Gibbons, of New Orleans, was unable to be present at the funeral. Archbishop Shaw, who came on from New Orleans for the ceremonies, brought word that Mr. Gibbons, bowed by the weight of his eighty-two years, was completely prostrated upon hearing of his brother's death. Grand nieces and grand nephews were the only blood relatives of the dead prelate who attended the funeral.

KIDDIES ROAM ON THE WHITE HOUSE LAWN

Thousands of Washington children and parents took possession of the White House lawns recently to take part in the greatest Easter-egg rolling Washington has ever seen. It was a revival of the annual fete after four years. Great crowds poured down every street, the kiddies armed with baskets of colored eggs, to the White House lawns and held away throughout the day. President and Mrs. Harding greeted the merrymakers from the porch of the White House, and every few minutes the president was seen at the windows of the executive office smiling genially at the frolicsome youngsters. The photograph shows a trio of happy kiddies with beribboned baskets and colored eggs on the White House lawn.

Object to Tilting of Lid Clamped Down on Portsmouth.

Portsmouth, March 31.—Concerted opposition by the Protestant ministers has followed a resolution of the retail merchants to tilt the Sunday blue-law closing lid that has been in operation here for fourteen weeks.

Resolutions were aropted in practically all Protestant churches, last night, condemning the lifting of the order, next Sunday. The ministers have called a mass-meeting for tonight, when Mayor Gableman, who issued the closing orders, will be present. The ministers claim since the Sunday blue laws were enforced, church attendance has increased fully thirty-five per cent.

FREE JITNEY BUSES ARE IN OPERATION

Aftermath of a Fight Between Council and Drivers.

Youngstown, March 31.—Free jitney busses were in operation here today, as an aftermath of a bitter fight between jitney drivers and city council, over enactment of an ordinance requiring $5,000 indemnity bond and $15 license fee.

"We do not demand fares, but we are not refusing donations or tips any one might care to give us," one driver stated.

Approximately 300 jitneys have been operating here and up until late this afternoon, only a dozen had procured the required licenses.

Want Papers Suppressed.

Dayton, March 31.—Rabbi Samuel Mayerberg, of the Jewish temple here, and E. G. Kusworm, attorney, appeared before the city commissioners today and ask a ban on the circulation of the "Dearborn Independent" and "Facts," papers against and for the Jews. The petitioners say the periodicals incite hatred and are no just. The matter is under advisement.

SUNDAY MOVIE BILL PUT AWAY

Motion To Postpone Action Prevails in House.

ANTI-BEER BILL IS PUT THROUGH

Senate Passes Measure To Prohibit Prescription of Any Liquor Save Pure Alcohol.

Columbus, March 31.—After passing a number of bills at a night session, the house recessed until April 18. This date was agreed upon yesterday at a conference of house and senate leaders with Governor Davis. The senate will remain in session and next week expects to devote most of its time to committee hearings.

Chief among measures approved was the Fouts bill providing a levy of one-eighth of a mill on the state grand tax duplicate for 1922-23 to create a building fund for the three state universities, Ohio State, Ohio at Athens and Miami at Oxford. Attempt to amend the bill so that the two normal schools at Bowling Green and Kent would receive approximately $65,000 each of the fund failed. The bill now goes to the senate.

The Gorrell bill, providing for reorganization of the state highway department, was passed, 71 to 19.

Municipalities are given the power to license and regulate soft drink establishments in another measure approved. The solons also favored the Bing bill appropriating about $800,000 for weak school districts.

Anti-Beer Bill Passed.

After protracted debate the senate passed the McCoy bill, which seeks to nullify the recent ruling of Former United States Attorney General Palmer that beer may be prescribed as medicine.

The McCoy bill prohibits the prescription of alcohol except in its pure form, thus barring any liquors containing an alcoholic content greater than one-half of 1 per cent.

No attempt was made to pass the bill as an emergency measure to bar a referendum and make it effective on passage. The vote on the bill was 31 yeas to 6 no, the opponents being the solid Cincinnati delegation, augmented by James A. Reynolds of Cleveland, the lone Democratic member, and Gifford of Toledo. The bill now goes to the house.

Sunday afternoon motion picture shows will not be legalized by the present general assembly.

By vote of 65 to 44, the house adopted a motion made by Freeman of Hardin to postpone indefinitely the Taylor bill. Since 63 are required to pass, and the opposition vote was greater than this, the doom of the measure is regarded sealed.

There was no discussion on the bill except the speech in favor of it by its author. Taylor assailed the Lord's Day Alliance and the National Reform association, which, he declared, were leading the opposition. He asserted these organizations are back of the blue law movement.

Deadlock on Taxation.

During prolonged debate, it became apparent that the necessary 75 votes to submit to the people the constitutional amendment recommended by the house committee on taxation could not be obtained. Opponents of the measure succeeded in amending it so as to make it objectionable to its proponents.

House leaders agreed this made it as good as dead and gave up the idea of even having the house vote on it. They said the constitutional amendment recommended by Governor Davis' citizens' committee will be given a chance after the house returns from its recess April 18, but defeat of it also was predicted. If so, the taxation question is to be dropped entirely and passed on to the next assembly.

Opponents of the uniform rule were happy last week because the uniform rule enforcement measures were defeated. The bills were unable to muster the necessary 63 votes to pass. Uniform rule forces are now just as happy at the other faction's inability to corral its necessary 75 to submit a constitutional amendment to compel an income tax, after enactment of which classification of property would be possible.

In order to give greater freedom to debate and make possible consideration of various proposals at the same time, the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole. The report of the governor's citizens' committee and the constitutional amendment recommended by the house taxation committee were before the committee at the same time. Neither was agreed upon and neither recommended back to the house.

The amendment recommended by the citizens' committee abrogates the uniform rule outright and makes the tax rate on real estate so low (12 and 15 mills) as to compel new sources of revenue, presumably an income tax. The proposal recommended by the house committee is similar except that it retains the uniform rule until a general income tax law is enacted.

Delicate Operation.

Cincinnati, March 31.—Walter Windsor, member of the Marietta college board of trustees, is recovering from an operation performed yesterday, for a carbuncle behind his right eye. It was necessary to remove the eye from its socket in order to remove the growth.

HE GOES THROUGH A MARRIAGE CEREMONY

Now Seeks a Divorce from Former Elevator Girl.

Boston, March 31.—Charmed, while under the influence of liquor, combined with old-fashioned notions of honor, led John Baker, "Romeo" Keys, wealthy clubman, formerly of Cincinnati, to go through a marriage ceremony with Florence Girardin, ex-elevator operator at the Harvard club, according to Keys who has brought suit for divorce.

Keys charges infidelity. He names Henry Lawson, of Boston, and John J. Hanley, a Somerville garage man. Keys married Miss Girardin in New York, after overcoming many obstacles, July 11, 1919, but alleges they never lived together. Keys is worth more than $300,000.

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR THE NEGRO

Provided In Bill Passing Pennsylvania House.

SENATOR PENROSE BEHIND MEASURE

Asserted Bill Will Have a Far-Reaching Political Effect. Some Comment.

Washington, March 31.—A far-reaching political effect is predicted by both Republican and Democratic leaders, today, to result from the declaration of Senator Penrose, member of the Republican national committee, from Pennsylvania and titular Republican leader of that state, for "equal rights for the negro."

Acting largely under orders from Penrose, the house of representatives at Harrisburg has just passed a bill which provides that negroes in Pennsylvania may patronize hotels, cafes, restaurants, educational institutions and amusement places on equal terms with whites.

The measure would severely penalize those who own or conduct "public utilities or accommodations" for refusing negroes access to them, or for denying negroes the same privileges accorded whites.

"I communicated with my friends at Harrisburg that I wanted the bill passed," Penrose said.

"I believe the time has come when our negro citizens must no longer be denied those rights as freemen which is given them by the constitution. There must be an end to the repression and discrimination to which negroes are subjected."

BARELY ESCAPE FROM A FIRE TRAP

Pittsburgh Workers Flee from Burning Paper Plant.

Pittsburgh, March 31.—Thirty-five women working on the fourth floor of the Pennsylvania Paper Stock company's building, in First avenue, barely escaped being trapped in a fire which started, this afternoon and spread throughout the building with great rapidity. The women and twenty men employed in the building fled through dense clouds of smoke to the street. There was a wild scramble down fire escapes from upper floors. Three alarms called the entire downtown department. The damage is about $100,000.

Ford Seeks Injunction.

Would Modify Sunday Order.

Portsmouth, O., March 31.—Resolutions in favor of tilting the Sunday lid in Portsmouth were passed at a meeting of retail merchants. The majority of them held that the convenience of the public and the best interests of the city would be served by not depriving the people of reasonable necessities on Sunday and the mayor and city government should modify the Sunday closing orders.

Mrs. Decker and Sons Indicted.

Warsaw, Ind., March 31.—Virgil Decker, his mother, Mrs. Lydia, and two brothers, Fred and Cal Decker, were indicted by the Kosciusko county grand jury, which completed its investigation into the death of Leroy Lovett, 19. Virgil Decker has been held in jail here on a charge of murder. His relatives were arrested and brought to jail here. The indictments carry two counts. One count charges that Lovett was murdered by an attack with a heavy iron bar, while the second count charges that the murder was committed with a deadly weapon unknown to the grand jury.

COGNIZANCE OF CHARGES MADE

Will Be Taken Officially by Great Britain.

A COMMISSION ON IRELAND REPORTS

Finds Irish People Are Denied Protection Under British Law. Bitter Criticisms.

Washington, March 31.—The British government will take official cognisance of the charges made by the American commission on conditions in Ireland, whose report is published today after several months' hearing, strongly condemns the British-Irish policy. It was announced that the British embassy here will issue an official statement on the commission's report, late this afternoon.

Report Made.

Washington, March 31.—The findings of the American commission on conditions in Ireland as contained in the interim report issued, today, after detailing the history of the committee's investigations, sets forth in conclusion as follows.

We find that the Irish people are deprived of the protection of British law, to which they would be entitled as subjects of the British king. They are likewise deprived of the moral protection granted by international law, to which they would be entitled as belligerents. They are at the mercy of imperial British forces which, acting contrary both to all law and all standards of human conduct, have instituted in Ireland a "terror," the evidence regarding which seems to prove that:

1. The imperial British government has created and introduced into Ireland a force of at least 78,000 men, many of them youthful and inexperienced, and some of them convicts, and has incited that force to unbridled violence.

2. The imperial British forces in Ireland have indiscriminately killed innocent men, women and children; have discriminately assassinated persons suspected of being Republicans; have tortured and shot prisoners while in custody, adopting the subterfuges of "refusal to halt" and "attempting to escape" and have attributed to alleged "Sinn Fein extremists" the British assassination of prominent Irish Republicans.

3. House burning and wanton destruction of villages and cities by imperial British forces under imperial British officers have been countenanced, and ordered by officials of the British government, and elaborate provision by gasolene sprays and bombs has been made in a number of instances for systematic incendiarism as part of a plan of terrorism.

4. A campaign for the destruction of the means of existence of the Irish people has been conducted by the burning of factories, creameries, crops and farm implements and the shooting of farm animals. This campaign is carried on regardless of the political views of the owners, and results in widespread and acute suffering among women and children.

5. Acting under a series of proclamations issued by the competent military authorities of the imperial British forces, hostages are carried by forces exposed to the fire of the Republican army; fines are levied upon towns and villages as punishment for alleged offenses of individuals; private property is destroyed in reprisals for acts with which the owners have no connection, and the civilian population is subjected to an inquisition upon the theory that individuals are in possession of information valuable to the military forces of Great Britain. These acts of the imperial British forces are contrary to the laws of peace or war among modern civilized nations.

6. This "terror" has failed to re-establish imperial British civil government in Ireland. Throughout the greater part of Ireland, British courts have ceased to function, local county and city governments refuse to recognize British authority, and British civil officials fulfill no function of service to the Irish people.

7. In spite of the British "terror" the majority of the Irish people have sanctioned by ballot the Irish Republic, give their allegiance to it, pay taxes to it, and respect the decisions of its courts and of its civil officials.

FORRY SHORTAGE PROBE IS NEARING COMPLETION

Work Lasting Several Weeks Practically Is Done.

STATE AUDITOR'S OFFICE EMPLOYE ANNOUNCES

Approximately 2,500 Personal Delinquent Tax Notices Are Sent Out

Examination of the Marion County treasury practically is completed and a special report of this feature of the audit which has been in progress at the court house for several weeks will be in the hands of the state auditor within a few days.

A B Peck head of the state auditor's office, in charge of the examination here said today the completion of the treasury examination does not mean that the entire work of the audit has been completed.

Some 2,500 personal delinquent tax notices recently were sent out by the auditors to persons whom the books show have not paid their taxes. Returns from these notices are somewhat slow and Mr. Peckinpaugh said that for this reason it is difficult to estimate the time that will be required to complete the work. Occasionally he said the examiners find one where the person has paid the taxes and has not been credited.

To Prosecuting Attorney

Audit of the treasurer's office was begun by the state officials shortly after confession of irregularities by Harry C Forry former county treasurer now out on bond to answer to a charge of embezzlement. It is expected that the special report will be submitted to the prosecuting attorney, after which the grand jury will consider Forry's case.

E D Foss assistant examiner, who has been assisting in the work at the court house, this morning went to Columbus. John Whitney an other state examiner, is still here with Mr Peckinpaugh.

It is also alleged that November 14, 1918, W T Jones and Flora R Jones sold the property to William Lemley and Grace Lemley, subject to the mortgage of the plaintiff and a second mortgage of $592.65.

The plaintiff asks judgment in the sum of $1,464.50, and its mortgage be declared the first and best and foreclosed the property sold and the proceeds applied to its claim and that W T Jones be required to set up whatever interest if any he has in the premises.

F. H. KRIDER NEW ERIE DIVISION ACCOUNTANT

Succeeding E. L. Keller, Transferred to New York

TIE AND RAIL BREVITIES PICKED UP IN THE YARDS

H. S. Elliott Leaves for Chicago and from There Will Go To Join Mrs. Elliott.

Effective Friday another change will take effect in the local accounting bureau of the Erie. F. H. Krider has been appointed division accountant to succeed E. L. Keller, who was transferred to the New York office. Mr. Krider comes from the office at Meadville.

H. S. Elliott who resigned his position as division engineer of the Erie to join his sick wife in Colorado left Wednesday night for Chicago where he will look after some business for a few days before going West.

Today is pay day for the local employes of the Erie for the first half of March.

F. F. Howard of Cleveland a special inspector for the American Railway Express company is looking after business in the city.

A. C. Justus special claim agent of the Erie is looking after business at Dayton today.

G. M. Finney trainmaster of the Hocking Valley is in the city today on business of his department.

C. A. Kothe of Youngstown out of the Erie mechanical department is looking after company business in the city.

J. S. Beale traveling freight solicitor of the Pennsylvania was a caller in railroad circles today.

At a largely attended meeting of the B. of L. F. & E. Wednesday night one application was balloted on. The members discussed the present business and labor conditions and appointed a committee to see what could be done in the way of distributing the work at this time. The auxiliary will hold a social for the men and their families in the hall next Wednesday night.

A large number of members of the Ladies' auxiliary Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, went to Mansfield today to attend the anniversary celebration of the lodge at that place this afternoon and evening.

Agreement of unskilled workmen of the Erie railroad with its officials to refer their wage dispute to the United States railroad labor board an agreement which was signed Tuesday afternoon, marks the first in which the roads and men have agreed formally to permit the railroad labor board to become the umpire of the case.

Heretofore unskilled as well as skilled railroad employes in refusing to accept amicably the cuts proposed have also refused to join the companies in certifying the dispute to the board and in every other case the disputes have gone to the board on the application of the railroad alone.

F. W. McLaughlin signed the agreement for the men and Robert S. Parsons for the railroad.

LIKE A MAD WET HEN MARCH ACTS UP TODAY

It's Skiddoo Day with April Fool Day Tomorrow

March is on like a young sheep-ish.

To-day it seemed to be going out like a mad wet hen—sort.

But maybe the lion will roar to night as he's due to won't. Anyhow March will go out just the same and come the tomorrow is April Fool day, plus Sunday or anything you want to call it "what means a fool there was" and a lot of other stuff.

No matter though what tomorrow will be today marks that well known calendar event of skiddoo or twenty three day for March in 1921 and for one, the Star's star weather observing reporter is not a bit sad about it. Yet with all things considered March hasn't been such a bad month but April always holds out such glories, and so April is always welcome.

Somehow or another the rain today didn't seem a bit refreshing did it? Say may even take one!

CLUB WOMEN'S MEETING IN HOME-PROJECT MOVEMENT

Mrs. U. S. Johnson Tells How Canton Gets Home.

Mrs. U. S. Johnson of Canton president of the Canton Women's club was the principal speaker late this afternoon at the club luncheon given at the Trinity Baptist church for the consideration of a club home for the Marion Federation of Women's clubs. A number of men, representing various organizations of the city are also among the speakers.

The luncheon was given by the city's committee of the federation so that the active members of the federation could be given a good idea of what a home will mean for Marion and how to go about securing it. Mrs. Johnson will tell how Canton women came to secure their home.

THRIFT PAINT

The Honest House Paint

Here is a paint that will compare favorably with the most expensive ready mixed paint on the market as to quality and is as cheap in price as the common paint sold by irresponsible dealers and the mail order houses, because, you are paying the price for the unreduced Thrift Paint, namely $4.50 per gallon that is sufficient to allow the manufacturer to use the best quality material, but you are not asked to pay this price for linseed oil as is the case where you buy paint all ready to apply.

One gallon of Thrift Paint must be thinned with from one to one and one-half gallons of oil, in that way bringing the cost down to as low a level as paint was five years ago.

AND YOU ARE GETTING THE BEST MATERIAL MONEY CAN BUY.

THE HUB OF COMMERCE.

Daily Proverb—"Our reputation for wisdom depends much on our success."

Why wouldn't it be a really good business plan to organize a campaign to reform the reformers?

We may be mistaken, but from Miss Robertson's utterances we would never take her for one of those women given to sniffing.

We live to learn. Who would have believed a decade or two ago that one of the greatest horrors of war was the horror of recovering from it?

According to statistics, they are practically 10,000,000 automobiles in the United States, but it's possible that the statisticians included Fords.

"It is a thing highly significant of habitual conditions," remarks the Detroit Free Press, "that nobody ever hears of an epidemic being carried from America to Europe." Or to Asia for that matter.

The physician who holds out that dodging automobiles is a healthful exercise may simply be laying lines to augment his practice.

We confess that we can't understand why Uncle Josephus Daniels ever went in for reporting when he might just as easily have decided that he was a first-class spreader of joy and sunshine in paragraphs.

The more the league of nations endeavors to function, the more obvious is the fact that it doesn't.

It's looking a long way ahead, but we wonder, at times, if the coal barons have yet figured to a nicety how much of an excess profit they can put on anthracite without driving former users to soft coal.

Now we are told that Mexico isn't fond of war. And yet there probably are dyed-in-the-wool pessimists who will keep right on denying that the world is growing better.

Despite the claims made to the contrary, we do not seriously credit the view that the average man who voted to make the country dry is laying awake o'nights regretting that he didn't vote the other way.

FOR FAIR TRIALS.

Recent acquittal at Matewan, West Virginia, of sixteen men charged with the slaying of several deputies who were being used in a coal strike has an echo in the passage by the state legislature of a measure which provides that jurors may be called from other counties to sit in important cases. It seems probable that the legislature saw in the Matewan verdict a fear on the part of the jurors to return a verdict in keeping with the evidence. The bill provides that the presiding judge may call citizens from other counties in case of difficulty in obtaining a jury, or he feels that justice would not be served by using a jury of persons who might be influenced by local conditions in arriving at a verdict.

In a number of states transferring cases to other counties for trial has been found to expedite the ends of justice. In the West Virginia experiment it will probably be found that the same feeling that makes it difficult to obtain a jury will probably operate to prevent a fair verdict.

A Feller Can't Find a Hitching Rack

NOT A WISE COURSE.

The statement of a French senator that the United States has never repaid a loan obtained from the king of France in 1778 was ill-advised; for the preponderance of evidence is against the truth of the assertion, and the incident will be seized upon and exploited by those desirous of fomenting bad feeling between the two nations. Already expressions of indignation are arising from Americans who rashly assume that the senator speaks for France, and that France is seeking a pretext to evade payment of her war debt to the United States.

It is reassuring to learn that some Frenchmen realize the unwisdom of discussing the subject in the spirit shown by the senator. One of his colleagues, for example, replied to him as follows: "I must ask pardon, but it would be dangerous for the good relations which it is indispensable to maintain with the United States to open such a discussion if really this debt has been paid."

There are in this country persons who would be delighted to have a strain placed on the friendship between this country and France. Some of them deliberately and openly tried to foster ill-feeling against our ally not long since by holding a meeting in New York at which French soldiers were accused of atrocities against Germans. French politicians are short-sighted indeed if they, unwittingly or not, abet these propagandists by expressing sentiments that are apt to cause irritation in the United States.

TWO-AND-A-HALF-CENT PIECE

Recent advocacy of the coinage of a two-and-one-half-cent coin in these columns has received the endorsement of the Fourth Estate, newspaper trade publication of New York, which brings out some sound arguments in favor of such a coin.

A two-and-one-half-cent piece would be far more useful that the proposed two-cent coin, which would save nobody anything and would be little more than an added coin to be confused in the pocket or in dim light with a nickel.

But a half-nickel would be a bird of another plumage. It would have its place in the bargain sales of department stores. In many a transaction the buyer pays an extra half-cent. There is no good reason why this should be and the extra half-cent would be saved to the individual by coinage of a half-nickel, which would be far more practical than either the proposed two-cent piece or the sometimes talked of half-cent coin.

ON ANNIVERSARY OF ARMISTICE.

President Harding has fixed November 11 next, the anniversary of Armistice day, as the occasion for the ceremonies connected with the burial of the unknown American soldier at the Arlington national cemetry. This man will represent not merely the 1,600 American soldiers who have not been identified, but all the 75,882 who gave their lives in the great war overseas.

With every branch of the public life of the nation represented, there can be no doubt that the ceremonies will be the most impressive—no matter how simple they may be—that ever took place on that spot. For though there are over 2,000 unindentified soldiers of the civil war sleeping in the big burial ground, these are individuals. On the other hand, the solitary figure will be conspicuous as a symbol and a reminder.

SIDE-SPLITTING COMEDY.

Don't guy the folks, the funny folks—
Don't guy them on the stage;
Or else those folks and all their friends
Will get in quite a rage.

Often truth is stranger than fiction.

Often, too, tragedy furnishes side-splitting comedy.

As an illustration of the latter truth, is the comedy furnished by the persons who are tragically objecting to our stage comedians caricaturing certain nationalities, classes and individuals, upon the stage.

As the editor of the Ohio State Journal points out, the stage comedians of the present are having a hard time of it. They simply can't be funny or foolish without proving offensive to some part of the public.

The poor comedians are at their wit's end.

What are they to do?

Dr. David Flynn, director of the New York state employment bureau, advances the idea and makes the assertion that rube characterizations on the stage are harming the agricultural prospects of the United States.

How?

Dr. Flynn insists that owing to "hayseed" comedians making farmers ridiculous it is almost impossible for farmers to obtain all the help they need on the farm.

"No one," asserts Dr. Flynn, "wants a job that has a ridiculous aspect."

Scarcity of farmers and farm help has existed for a quarter of a century or more, in this country. Dr. Flynn thinks it has been due, in large part, to the loss of prestige the business of farming has suffered through the mischievous activities of our stage jokers.

Maybe Dr. Flynn is right.

Maybe he is wrong.

I think he's wrong—entirely wrong.

Who is ridiculed more frequently, on the American stage, than the Irishman?

Yet the Irish continue to flock to this country.

Who is caricatured oftener than the policeman.

Yet men continue to seek jobs on our police forces.

Who has fun poked at him more frequently than has the Hebrew?

Yet the Hebrew continues to stay here—and live and laugh—and prosper and succeed.

Dr. Flynn is so serious that he's funny—actually and acutely funny.

I see where a bill has been introduced into the Ohio legislature, providing that it shall be a misdemeanor punishable by fine to poke fun at a preacher.

Gosh!

What are we going to do?

Refuse to see the funny side of life? Decline to recognize the ridiculous? Just twiddle our thumbs and look side-splittingly solemn?

EAGLES TO BUILD HOME ON WEST CENTER STREET

Purchase of Smith Property for $28,000 Is Authorized.

MIDST RAPS AND SIGNS OF THE VARIOUS LODGES

Twenty-Third Anniversary of Canby Temple, No. 152, Is Celebrated Last Night.

The purchase of the old Smith homestead just west of the Dobbins block, opposite the Central Junior High school on west Center street, was authorized at the meeting of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, Wednesday night, as a site for a home. The property, which is owned by W. H. Schaffner and H. Ackerman, will be purchased through R. T. Lewis and George B. Knapp, who hold an option on the property. The consideration is $28,000.

Following the report of the building site committee, Wednesday evening, the committee was instructed to close the deal. The lodge contemplates the construction of a four-story brick structure to cover the entire lot which has a frontage of sixty-six feet on Center street and is 192½ feet deep. The lodge will reserve the third and fourth floors for lodge and club-room purposes and also the basement in which will be installed a gymnasium, swimming pool, baths and bowling alleys. The first floor will be business rooms and the second floor will be fitted for up-to-date offices.

It is expected that the work of excavating will start in the summer. The meeting was largely attended and very enthusiastic. Two candidates were initiated and a social session followed. The local lodge has grown so rapidly in the last two years that the present lodge quarters on east Center street are much too small.

Mizpah Encampment.

Two candidates were given the patriarchal and golden rule degrees at a special meeting of Mizpah Encampment, No. 50, I. O. O. F., Wednesday night. Arrangements were made to confer the royal purple degree at the next meeting Tuesday, April 19.

Owls Plan for Dance.

Only the routine business was transacted at the meeting of the Owls, Wednesday night. Plans were made for a dance next Wednesday night.

Sojourners Lodge.

Sojourners' Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, met Wednesday evening and conferred the master Mason's degree on a class of candidates.

Canby Temple Anniversary.

Canby Temple, No. 152, Pythian Sisters, celebrated its twenty-third anniversary, Wednesday night, by entertaining the knights and their families in the lodge hall. More than 200 were in attendance.

The program opened with the presentation of the flags by Mrs. Anna Ulsh and Mrs. Daisy Felty. The invocation was given by Mrs. Ruth Shoots. The address of welcome was made by Mrs. Nellie Kerr and the response by T. N. Porter. Mrs. Pearl Renzenberger gave a reading and Mrs. Gail Lashey and Miss Eunice Bond followed with a piano duet. "Modern Love Letters" was the title of a reading by Miss Victoria Jackson. The program concluded with a violin solo by Arthur Roush. Following a supper, a season of dancing was enjoyed, the music being furnished by Paul, Arthur and Ruth Ella Roush.

Knights of Columbus.

The Knights of Columbus, assisted by the Catholic Women's league, gave a card party and dance in Schwinger's hall, Wednesday evening and about 250 were in attendance.

The ladies' honors at cards went to Mrs. R. J. Garceau and the consolation trophy to Miss Margaret McClory, while the honors for the men went to Mr. William E. Lawler. Mrs. Mary Sullivan received the non-players' award and Mr. Frank Johnson was consoled.

Mrs. William Lawler was chairman of the card committee and Mrs. Henry Yochem, chairman of the refreshment committee.

Doing a Comeback.

New York, March 31.—Pete Herman is doing a comeback The former champion of the bantamweights, who lost his title to Joe Lynch, last December, is on the highway, today, to a return match with the present title holder. Herman demonstrated his ability in a decisive manner before a packed house at the Pioneer Sporting club, last night, when he polished off Willie Spencer in twelve rounds Spencer is one of the gamest, fastest and most capable of the new crop of bantams. He is fast and hard to hit in the vulnerable spots, but in Herman's hands he was just a ordinary fighter. Herman's victory over Spencer is the second he has scored here within a week He knocked out George Adams, of Chicago, in jig time, recently and in both of these bouts his work attracted attention because of the speed and aggressiveness he showed Cleveland, March 31.—Declaring that some owners of major league baseball had not honestly enforced the anti-gambling rule of the American league, Ban Johnson, president of the American league, created a sensation here, last night However, when asked to be more specific, he refused, saying "it will all come out in the next few weeks State's Attorney Crowe, at Chicago, is going to the bottom of the matter in his investigation into the 1919 scandal, now in progress The lid is coming off." Some of the magnates are trying to keep the sport clean, he asserted and high up on the honor list he placed Jim Dunn, owner of the Cleveland Indians.

Akron in League.

Flint, Michigan, March 31.—Akron may become a member of the Michigan-Ontario league, it became known here today. The Ohio city, recently dropped by the International league, has made an offer to President George H Mains for franchise Several other cities have inquired regarding the chance of obtaining franchises in the "Mint" league since Port Huron took over the Battle Creek franchise and there is talk of a reorganization with Montreal and Ottawa considered as possible members.

DEAN ALFRED VIVIAN ON COOPERATIVE MARKETING

He Addresses Farm Bureau at Annual Meeting.

J. H Woleslagel, of Prospect, was reelected president of the Marion County Farm bureau at the annual meeting in the auditorium of the Y. M C. A. Wednesday afternoon.

O P Shoots Marion, was reelected vice president; G. E Waddell, Marion, was named secretary to succeed George Schweinfurth, and J P Robinson, of Morral, was reelected treasurer The vote on all officers was unanimous

By unanimous vote the uniform constitution sponsored by the Ohio Farm Bureau federation was adopted. One of the changes provided by this constitution is the election of the secretary by vote of the membership instead of by the executive board, as provided by the old constitution

There was a large attendance at the meeting, the auditorium being nearly filled C A. Dyer, Jackson county, member of the executive committee of the Ohio State grange, addressed the members on taxes and taxation and blamed the taxation system for the scarcity of homes in the cities and country A vote of confidence in the representatives of the grange was taken.

Dean Alfred Vivian, of the college of agriculture, Ohio State university, gave an address on "Selling What We Grow," and gave as the best example of successful cooperative selling the organization of California fruit growers. He cautioned the farmers to beware of promises of large profits through cooperative marketing will succeed only on in their enthusiasm, are inclined to stretch the amount which will be added to the selling price through elimination of profits of some middlemen, but asserted the gain, although comparatively small on the unit, is well worth working for

Dean Vivian declared that cooperative marketing will succeed only on a sound economic basis and good business principles He branded as false the idea that through cooperative organization the growers can fix the price of commodities "We can eliminate some of the intermediate profits and in that way make a little more, but the price of our product is set by the customer and not by the producer"

Easy For Thin People to Put on Flesh and Gain Weight

It's such an easy matter nowadays for thin, weak, scrawny people to put on good, healthy, solid flesh and become plump and graceful that one often wonders why there are still so many people who seem to prefer to be "all skin and bone," ungainly and unpleasant to look upon.

Whoever could discover a remedy that; whoever could discover a remedy that would cause the food that one puts into the stomach to turn into good, rich, flesh-making blood instead of going to waste, would also discover how to put healthy muscular flesh onto thin under-nourished people and this has now been accomplished.

If you are thin, under developed, nervous, weak, or lack vigor and vitality, you can secure any good pharmacy at moderate cost a ten days' treatment of EVANS' TRIPLE PHOSPHATES, a new combination of flesh producing, muscle building, strength creating elements that is guaranteed to put good, solid, lasting flesh on your body and to make you strong, healthy and vigorous, or money back.

Physicians who have watched the results of the Evans' Triple Phosphates treatment are astonished at its rapid action—often in a month five to ten pounds of desirable weight is gained. Bartlett's Drug Store has agreed to supply readers of this paper with Evans' Triple Phosphates and to guarantee it to do just what is claimed for it or money returned. —Adv.

50,000 CHEVROLET "Four-Nineties"

CHEVROLET

THE production schedule of Chevrolet "Four-Ninety" Models for the seven months from January 1st to July 31st, 1921, is fifty thousand cars.

To each retail purchaser of a new Model "Four-Ninety" car at present list prices, we will make the following cash payments,—"Four-Ninety" Touring $70; "Four-Ninety" Roadster $70; "Four-Ninety" Light Delivery Wagon $70; "Four-Ninety" Chassis $70; "Four-Ninety" Coupe $100; "Four-Ninety" Sedan $100; provided the Chevrolet Motor Companies manufacture and sell fifty thousand new Chevrolet Model "Four-Ninety" cars between January 1st, 1921, and July 31st, 1921. This offer to be subject to the terms as set forth in full in the refund certificate which will be delivered to each purchaser.

This refund represents savings in material prices under present readjusted conditions, which savings can be made provided Chevrolet factories continue to operate on the estimated average quantity production basis.

It is in keeping with the Chevrolet policy to make the price of its product as low as quality manufacture on a large scale will permit. It is in keeping with the Chevrolet purpose of providing quick, convenient, economical transportation at a cost within reach of those who want an automobile.

Fifty thousand cars is the minimum which Chevrolet engineers estimate will secure substantial savings in cost in manufacture. These savings will be passed on to the purchasers of these fifty thousand cars.

Each purchaser of a Model "Four-Ninety" will receive a certificate from his dealer, or from the Chevrolet retail store manager. This certificate will be redeemed as indicated on its face.

The entire plan is a straightforward business proposition presented in a straightforward way. Whether you are in the market for a new car or not, you must not fail to learn the details of this unique and simple plan. It offers to every man of sound business judgment an opportunity to take advantage of the best automobile value obtainable.

Retail purchasers of Model "Four-Ninety" cars since October 1st, 1920, will receive their certificates through their local dealers or retail stores on application to them.

Production results will be announced not later than August 10th, 1921. Certificates will be subject to payment according to their terms thereafter up to September 15th, 1921.

Holding A Husband

BY ADELE GARRISON.

"There!" Mrs. Durkee set a low bowl of roses on a small table by the window and looked around Lelia's room in triumph. "I think it's done now, or would you put another cluster—"

"Not a single bud more, please!" Lillian ejaculated. "It's perfect now. Don't spoil it."

"All right." Her Fluffiness looked at her tiny wrist watch and uttered an ejaculation of dismay. "We've got to hurry, folks, or we won't be dressed. Alfred said we should not meet them at the station, as he didn't know just which of the early evening trains they could catch. But we've got to be ready for them at 6 o'clock, for they may be able to make connections with the train which reaches here at that hour. So you folks who are going to dress in the other house, please scat right out of here. Edith will arrange the flowers in the living room, and I'll start the dinner, and then we can dress."

"I suppose that 'scat business' means us, old dear," Dicky drawled, looking at me. "So let's vamoose. I'm anxious to see the damage over there, anyway."

"It also means Marion and me," Lillian said. "But we're 'quick changes'—me child and me—so we'll let you get through your inspection first before we amble over."

She flashed me a significant glance, which I returned with a grateful one. Dicky must have seen both glances, for he suddenly laughed:

"I'll promise not to leave any scars, or to use a stick thicker than my thumb," he said sardonically. "But I ask you now, as man to woman, what's the use of having a wife unless you can hold her responsible when things happen."

"Will you stop gabbling, and get out of here?" our little hostess demanded frantically.

Dicky seized me by the hand, rushed me out of the room and down the stairs.

"What did our beloved handmaiden say to the mess when she discovered it?" Dicky asked as we crossed the lawn.

I stopped short with a little gasp of dismay. I had completely forgotten my little maid and her tantrum, and I wondered if we should find either Katie or Jim on the premises when we reached there. That Dicky must be acquainted forthwith with this new development was certain. I didn't wish him to get the idea that I was keeping this new development from him also.

"What's the matter? Just remembered that you left Katie locked in the coal cellar?" Dicky drawled.

"Worse than that," I retorted. "Stop right here till I tell you."

I rapidly sketched the incidents leading up to Katie's outburst and her flight to her room, ending with a despairing little wail.

"And I don't know what in the world I shall do if Katie and Jim leave just now with all this work on hand."

"They won't leave," Dicky declared confidently. "Katie might be nut enough to try it, but Jim has a lot of sense, too much to be pulled around by a petticoat. He knows what a good thing he has with us, crippled as he is, and he'll never let Katie upset the apple cart. Nay, nay, dear heart. Pluck up your courage."

I tried to emulate his cheery mood and succeeded somewhat until we came to the side door, for there we found Jim and Katie waiting for us, each with a small grip packed. Katie's swollen, tear-stained face was filled with resentful sullenness, while her husband's, though free from anger, was still eloquent with dignified disapproval.

"We're going, Mrs. Graham," Jim addressed himself to me. "Katie, here, is all excited like, and I'm going to take her down to my folks until we can find a place. She won't be back, but I'll come back tomorrow, if you like, and help you through with the packing and moving. I'm sorry to leave like this, but I don't think we deserved having our home broken up in this way without ever telling us. We expected to stay with you as long as—"

"Why, Jim!" I interrupted. "You must misunderstand. I never meant—"

Dicky interrupted me with a little air of authority which I had seen him display to me but once or twice before.

"Please let me attend to this, my dear," he said quietly, then turned to Jim.

"My dear chap," he said cordially "suppose we talk this over first. Remember I've just got here, and know nothing about this, Katie!" his voice was crisp, peremptory, "go to your room and wait for Jim."

I held my breath, wondering what Katie would do. But after one quickly drawn breath, one long, steady glance at Dicky, she turned on her heel and obeyed him.

THE PORTRAIT, A STORY OF AN OBSESSION—By Kate Dickinson Sweetser

Constantly Before Her, the Almost Speaking Likeness of Her Predecessor Seemed to Mock the Second Wife With a Fixed Stare and Smiling Lips, Then Nature Intervened

(Copyright 1921 by Public Ledger Co.)

At every meal Helene stood in her accustomed place, watching the bride with merry, mocking eyes, listening to her every word, scorning her when she did not fling appropriate jest or repartee across the table as she, Helene, would have done

GELD MANLEY'S artistic manner was to pose a subject in as nearly as possible the same place and light as that in which a finished portrait was to hang. He made careful study of Helene Hamilton and the room background before beginning work on her, and the keynote of his conception, her dominant characteristics was struck when he designed the portrait for the dining room, and posed her in an attitude of ease and grace, leaning one plump elbow on the corner of the white Italian mantel, not below where she was later to hang in perpetual ease and grace. In actual fact, the conception was not complete, for Helene was many-sided, and to doom her for all time to the dining-room mantel was to curtail her ability, and doom all but one of its talents to oblivion.

But Geld Manley was an autocrat where his work was concerned. The portrait was hung where he decreed, and Helene, goddess of hearthand home, looked down on John Hamilton as he ate his cereal, buttered his toast, sipped his demi-tasse—while Helene, the actual, flashed tantalizing glances from the new mahogany, in competition with that other canvas self.

The ethal was a delightful combination of sweetness and light, of charm and dignity—the portrait was a compelling likeness of feature and spirit. If Helene was anything, it was bewitching, unique. The portrait is Helene—merry eyes, mocking lips, grand curves of profile and features, and more than that—it was Helene, the ideal, home-girl, mother. The close portrayal of body and spirit was a delight to John Hamilton and also to Helene's mother, the doting pair of an only child, who could have sat eternally on reproductions of her daughter—as well as to friends, who marked the magic of Manley's art, which could so depict a personality like Helene's.

When Helene the actual was gone from home and love of John, Helene, goddess of hearth and hearthill long there in eternal youth and gay mocking, bewitching, human, elusive as his fortune. John Hamilton lingered over his meals, that he might feast on the portrait, and as he looked, the finest of it brought comfort, strength and courage. It fostered zest—fortified him to face the world again and work, and go out into the dying eyes of those who knew, meet the dying eyes of those who knew.

For a year, he and the portrait were the comrades, but time loosens all ties, even those of love, when the human touch is gone. In the second year of his solitude his horizon widened, and soon after village rumor had begun to play battledore and shuttlecock with his name, he announced his engagement to Anna Redmond, Helene's cousin and most intimate friend, who had been a frequent and most welcome guest in the home during Helene's lifetime.

To Helene's mother, who had cared for John Hamilton's comfort and managed his household since her child's death, the engagement was a bitter confirmation of the inconstancy of all male created beings, and she and her belongings at once became conspicuous by their absence. She was abroad at the time of the wedding, and village censure of her was sharp, for the widower had chosen wisely and waited decorously. There could be but one Helene, but Anna's time had come, and the difference between the cousins was so marked that the two wives could not but mark two distinctly different epochs in John Hamilton's life. The second could not encroach on the first. Anna was brown-haired, soft-voiced, placid, sunny and even in temperament. She had but one human ideal, cherished secretly from childhood—John; one love—John; and John was hers now. She felt no jealousy of Helene in retrospect, her hour had come.

But to be matrimonial successor to Helene was no easy matter and required ready wit, special courage, and confidence in one's own ability to charm. Anna did not face the situation; she simply accepted it, and became a fixed star in a sky across which a meteor once had flashed.

Slight evidences of the change of mistresses were evident in the home. Helene's room had been hung with yellow; Anna's was in pink. The Louis Seize boudoir became a den where John and his friends could smoke and discuss business and politics. Anna's seat at the table faced the portrait; Helene's had not.

John was very affectionate, very solicitous to do all, be all that would minister to Anna's comfort and pleasure. He was entirely satisfied with the restful atmosphere of his home, and he loved Anna with a quiet love, a love which she repaid in overflowing measure.

But there was the portrait to be reckoned with, and the reckoning was a heavy one. At every meal, Helene stood in her accustomed place, watching the bride with merry, mocking eyes, listening to her every word, scorning her when she did not fling appropriate jests or repartee across the table as she, Helene, had done. Anna, never original in thought or action, found herself watching Helene for suggestion, for approval, for inspiration. She began to listen for her own silences, to hesitate to voice her own puerile witticisms, even to stammer, under the mockery of that pictured rival, becoming finally so conscious of her own limitations of speech and looks that she was shorn of individuality through desire to imitate. Helene had been a real rose—she, Anna, was a white one. Red was the color John liked best. Oh, the misery of it!

A FUTILE anger possessed her soul that the portrait should so dominate her domain, dwarf her sources, cripple her energies, destroy her happiness. She rallied to her own defense, became gay, frivolous, chattering. This was surely not serene, quiet Anna! The newly acquired manner did not appeal to John. Anna detected her defeat and was in despair under the mockery of her successful rival, who now dominated with the hideous entirety of a controlling power.

The obsession was complete. Anna grew pale, lifeless, nervous, without enthusiasm or appetite, and her husband noted the change [illegible] lary melted into one, were expressed in John's face and voice.

"It hasn't been injured, Dolly? It hasn't fallen? Quick, tell me!"

Anna shook her head. "Oh, no," she stammered, "no, but, John, it hurts me—She was so—so different—"

There was a note of question, of appeal in the statement which, detected and satisfied, as love alone can satisfy, would have guaranteed eternal calm, but the man was deaf to it.

"I don't understand," he said. "If nothing has happened to the picture, then what can it have to do with your feelings? Of course, Helene was different, but what of that?"

There was a silence. Anna breathed fast and twisted a lock of her hair between thumb and forefinger. John's forehead was wrinkled with the riddle he was trying to read. Suddenly he surmised.

"It can't be you are jealous because she hangs there yet. That wouldn't be worthy of you—poor little Helene!"

The tenderness in his reminiscent tone was a stab in the right place. Anna shivered and drew herself free of his protecting arm.

"No, indeed," she said, proudly, "that would be too absurd, wouldn't it? But, John, tell me, did it never occur to you to take that portrait down before I came?"

John's astonishment was as honest as his nature was direct. "Why certainly not," he answered. "You always said you liked it specially, and you and she were always such chums. Of course not. Why do you ask, Dolly?"

But Anna had congealed, and no attempts to force her further confidence were of any avail. John, completely befogged as to the matter with Anna or the portrait, was obliged to drop the subject—and befogged he remained.

His compromise with intelligence was sternly practiced. He could not understand, but he could propitiate. A motor, new jewelry, the latest books, a trip—these he laid at Anna's feet in place of appreciation. She accepted them with proud and silent grace, while John Hamilton felt that his second wife was not the open book he had supposed.

The obsession of Anna was complete. She was no longer Anna, not could she be Helene. She was not John's wife—the other was that—she was but a substitute. Rage possessed her soul and the rage that possesses such calm souls as hers is twice as awful in its intensity as that which comes to more spontaneous natures.

On a bright June day, from breakfast hour until the time to dress for John's coming, Anna did not leave the dining room. At times she stood by the mantel, just below that merry, mocking rival; at times she stood before the mirror, looking at her living self; for the rest of the day she sat in her place at the dining table, looking into space. Just before 5 o'clock she rang for the man, and bade him bring the stepladder. Her orders astonished him, for he had not been in John Hamilton's employ for the last five years without knowing the valuation of the portrait. Anna watched him bring it down, fetched a cloth with which to flick the accumulation of dust from its frame, herself enveloped it in netting, then in papers, and followed it to the storeroom, where the hated rival was placed, face to the wall in a dark corner. Then Anna directed the hanging of a Corot, a stunning Braun photograph, over the white Italian mantel. That done, she went to her room, dressed for motoring, and drove to the train to meet her husband.

She was her most attractive self that afternoon, and John Hamilton felt pride in the choice of his wife. He looked affectionately at her and expanded into unusual confidences in the glow of his emotions. That night the dining room was lighted as usual with candles which threw all the room into gloom—the table alone into high light—and John noticed nothing new or unusual in the familiar place.

THE shock was as sharp as a pistol when it came, at breakfast time; when he saw what she had done to him, to Helene, but he said no word. He saw her go white from hair to lips, when his eyes rested first on the Corot, when his lips opened with the words that never came. For an hour it seemed to him, to her, he stood ready to speak. She sat, ready to defend. Then he turned, and without a glance left her, and soon she heard him giving orders about staying in town over-night. Reproach or questions would have been an immense relief—she wished she were a fishwife—a girl of the streets, that she might scream, might brawl, for one unrestrained hour. Would she ever see him again? But she had done what was right, oh, she was right! Now she would go out into the air and sunshine. She was afraid to stay in the house with her thoughts, and with that disgraced other wife, disinherited by her!

Upon her return, Helene's mother met her on the threshold, beside herself with anger; she said her child had been insulted; the insult must be atoned for; Anna must wipe it out by restitution of her child to the place which was hers by prior claim; Anna must apologize.

Anna was white, set, determined. She had done what was right, she said, what common decency demanded should have been done before her coming. She could never apologize—had given no insult. The warfare waged hot and merciless against her, and when John Hamilton returned from the club after forty-eight hours of deliberation as to his course in the matter, he found Helene's mother frenzied beyond the bounds of need or decency, and village gossip busy with an affair which should have been his and Anna's alone.

His decision at the club had been to convince Anna of the great wrong she had done to him and to the cousin who had loved her so dearly in removing the portrait, to make her restore it to its place before he restored her to her place in his affections, but decision often flies through the door when impulse enters. Instead, he took Anna in his arms, in the presence of Helene's mother, and thundered out a decree of protection.

"My wife and I will decide together where it is best to hang your daughter's portrait; together, do you understand? For the sake of that daughter, who never included in a petty thought, or in scurrilous gossip to the detriment of a human soul, let this matter be dropped at once, or never enter my house again! This is no concern of yours!"

Such was John Hamilton when face to face with a weaker soul in need of protection—and with a realization of his own possible mistake in judgment. Anna clung to him in relaxed silence, then lifted an entreating face to his. He kissed her, the Corot hung where it had been placed, Helene remained in banishment and Anna's daily life went on as usual. But she grew more nervous than formerly; the Corot brought no balm to her riotous emotions. Lurking in the shadow of the great, branching trees, hiding within the thickness of the woodland depths, elusive, mocking, wandered Helene, the very spirit of nature and of beauty. There was no relief to be found now from the agony with which Anna's soul was blistered. Out of sight was doubly in mind and oh, the misery of it!

FOR sixteen long months the portrait remained where Anna had herself placed it, and during every moment of those weary months Anna felt that John had not forgotten, had not forgiven, could never understand, and that she could never feel that she was wrong. But oh, to be a red rose! This was Anna's cry to a listening Providence as she lay sleepless in the long nights, sharing her pillow with that pictured rival.

Then came a time of doubts and fears, and then relief following suspense. Mother and child were doing well. Facing the door of his living room, John Hamilton, as if ashamed of being thought effeminate in uttering the words, whispered to himself, "my daughter, my daughter!" And there glistened in his eyes the evidence that a strong man has been touched by the mystery and the bliss of fatherhood.

Anna sent for him at last, and he stood beside her, holding the tiny atom who was his child. Anna looked from the great rugged face of her husband to the tiny one pillowed on his arm, and laid a hand on the baby's head.

"Do you see it, too?" she asked. "You do, don't you?"

The question in his eyes was a mute appeal to her to interpret what he fancied, but dared not voice. She understood his appeal and she answered her own interrogation:

"Yes, Helene! It almost killed me at first, I thought it was my punishment. Now I see it differently. I am glad now. Oh, John—she could never have been—jealous—she would just have loved! I have been remembering—I think she would have given you to me if she could—and I—I took you away from her. If our child has her nature, too, it will be a blessing. It will prove that she was a woman and understood—and forgave—John, you do see?"

It was hard for a practical man to follow the working of a woman's instinct; or to see the tiny wrinkled rosebud in as clear a light as she did, but John Hamilton felt rather than saw.

"Yes," he said, "I do. She loved us both, Anna; she has come in the child to reunite us."

That the nurse sent him from the room shortly was no misfortune to either husband or wife. There was nothing more to be said then, except what Anna whispered as he left her:

"Have her put back before I go downstairs, John. We were always chums, you know. Baby must learn to love her as—as—we do."

Angela and I and the Bath Sponge—By George A. Birmingham

A FORTNIGHT ago I received, quite unexpectedly, a sum of money. It was not a large sum. A collier, or even a railway porter, would have regarded it as inconsiderable, but to Angela and me it seemed a delightful windfall. We agreed to spend it in the pleasantest of all ways. I should give Angela a present of something she really wanted. She would give me a present, leaving me to choose what it would be. Angela's present was the more expensive of the two. She chose a hat. But mine was dear, too, surprisingly dear. I had long wanted a bath sponge, a really large, an enormous sponge. Years ago I saw a sponge of the sort I wanted, about the size of a small hat box. The very rich man who owned it had left it in the bathroom of the house in which I was staying. Ever since I laid eyes on it I longed, but almost hopelessly, for one like it.

WE SPENT a day in town buying our presents. The morning was devoted to Angela's hat. After lunch we started at the stores and visited six other shops in pursuit of the largest possible sponge. We carried it and the hat home in triumph. That night we laid the sponge in soak and next morning I used it for the first time. It really was very, almost inconveniently, large.

Angela, who takes her bath after me, told me at breakfast that I had not squeezed out the sponge properly.

"I looked at it," she said, "and it was half full of water. It will be ruined if you don't squeeze it out well every morning."

"I did my best," I said.

"The fact is," said Angela, "that sponge is far too large. No one could squeeze it out properly. A sponge half the size would be far better."

Angela's own sponge is much less than half the size. I felt that she was a little jealous of mine; which was not nice of her. I had not disparaged her hat.

At luncheon Angela returned to the subject of the sponge in a tiresome, almost a nagging, way. She said it would not fit into the sponge tray and lay about, making the bathroom very untidy, adding that she could not imagine what any one wanted with a sponge that size.

"If it was half as big as it is, it would be quite as useful," said Angela, "and not half so troublesome."

"Perhaps," I said, "you'd like me to cut it in two."

She said nothing in reply; but I could see she thought the sponge would be much better if it were cut in half. Then no doubt she could have got half of it instead of the miserable, ragged little thing she uses. I felt aggrieved. After all I had not suggested chopping up her hat.

"It seems a pity," I said coldly, "to cut up a sponge like that. It cost——"

"I know what it cost," said Angela.

"And that," I said, "was a pre-war price. The man said so. If you brought a sponge like that at the present price—well, it would take a millionaire to do it."

I took an extra bath that evening by way of showing that I really appreciated my sponge. That irritated Angela and she complained afterward that it was actually dripping over the bathroom floor.

"Unless you can manage to squeeze it out," she said, "it will be utterly ruined, and so will the oilcloth on the floor."

I did my best to squeeze out the sponge next morning, but it was very difficult. I began to think that only men with exceptionally strong hands ought to own large sponges. But I did not admit that to Angela. On the contrary, I looked into the bathroom a couple of times during the morning to admire the sponge.

THAT afternoon a terrible thing happened. The sponge was cut in two, and one-half of it disappeared. I was deeply grieved and hurt. I should not have believed beforehand that Angela could have been capable of such an abominable action. The waste of money was bad enough, for the two halves were not, of course, worth a quarter of the price of the whole sponge. But apart from that it was a mean thing to do. I was pleased with that sponge and was learning to love it. I wonder what Angela would say if I cut the feathers out of her hat and used them for cleaning my pipe. I felt the thing so deeply that I did not say a word about it. Nor did Angela, and I knew she was ashamed of herself, for she concealed the half sponge she had taken from me. She used it privately, no doubt, but she never left it where I could see it.

For two days there was a silent coldness between me and Angela. I would not speak of the sponge and I could not talk about anything else when my mind was full of the disaster. Then, next day, Angela burst into my study just before luncheon.

"I've found the other half of your sponge," she said, "in the cook's bedroom."

"Angela," I said, "why did you cut it in two?"

"You silly old fool," she said, "I didn't cut it! Do you mean to say you thought I did?"

"After all you said about it being too large," I said, "and being heavy if it was half the size, I naturally thought—but if it was really the cook—"

"I'd just as soon cut your head in half," said Angela, "and I've sacked the cook on the spot, without a month's notice."

That convinced me that Angela was really sympathetic. It took her three months to get that cook, and she may never be able to get another.

Simple Deduction

"SAW Mr. and Mrs. Hauge going to church this morning."

"Did she have on a new hat?"

"Why, I think not."

"Then I must drop in and see poor old Hauge."

"What's the idea?"

"Why, if they were going to church, and she hadn't on a new hat, he's had another bad attack of heart trouble."

One From the Gallery

AN AMERICAN who formerly lived in Paris says that during the Napoleonic crane of some years ago he attended a Napoleon play at the Odeon.

In this play one act hinged on the birth of the little king of Rome. If the child was a girl one cannon shot was to be fired; if a boy, two shots.

On the night in question a cannon shot rolled forth, and there ensued a long silence on the stage.

"It is a girl," said Josephine, wearily.

But just then a second shot was heard, and the empress cried:

"No; a boy, a boy!"

Now, through some error, a third cannon shot thundered forth. In the collected pause that followed a queue in the gallery shouted:

"Pardieu, it's triplets!"

Holding A Husband

BY ADELE GARRISON.

"There!" Mrs. Durkee set a low bowl of roses on a small table by the window and looked around Leila's room in triumph. "I think it's done now, or would you put another cluster—"

"Not a single bud more, please!" Lillian ejaculated. "It's perfect now. Don't spoil it."

"All right." Her Fluffiness looked at her ring watch and uttered an ejaculation of dismay. "We've got to hurry, folks, or we won't be dressed. Alfred said we should not meet them at the station, as he didn't know just which of the early evening trains they could catch. But we've got to be ready for them at 6 o'clock, for they may be able to make connections with the train which reaches here at that hour. So you folks who are going to dress in the other house, please scat right out of here. Edith will arrange the flowers in the living room, and I'll start the dinner, and then we can dress."

"I suppose that 'scat business' means us, old dear," Dicky drawled looking at me. "So let's vamoose. I'm anxious to see the damage over there, anyway."

"It also means Marion and me," Lillian said. "But we're 'quick changes'—me child and me—so we'll let you get through your inspection first before we amble over."

She flashed me a significant glance, which I returned with a grateful one. Dicky must have seen both glances, for he suddenly laughed.

"I'll promise not to leave any scars, or to use a stick thicker than my thumb," he said sardonically. "But I ask you now, as man to woman, what'n'll's the use of having a wife unless you can hold her responsible when things happen."

"Will you stop gabbling, and get out of here?" our little hostess demanded frantically.

Dicky seized me by the hand, rushed me out of the room and down the stairs.

"What did our beloved handmaiden say to the mess when she discovered it?" Dicky asked as we crossed the lawn.

I stopped short with a little gasp of dismay. I had completely forgotten my little maid and her tantrum, and I wondered if we should find either Katie or Jim on the premises when we reached there. That Dicky must be acquainted forthwith with this new development was certain. I didn't wish him to get the idea that I was keeping this new development from him also.

"What's the matter? Just remembered that you left Katie locked in the coal cellar?" Dicky drawled.

"Worse than that," I retorted. "Stop right here till I tell you."

I rapidly sketched the incidents leading up to Katie's outburst and her flight to her room, ending with a despairing little wail.

"And I don't know what in the world I shall do if Katie and Jim leave just now with all this work on hand."

"They won't leave," Dicky declared confidently. "Katie might be nut enough to try it, but Jim has a lot of sense, too much to be pulled around by a petticoat. He knows what a good thing he has with us, crippled as he is, and he'll never let Katie upset the apple cart. Nay, nay, dear heart. Pluck up your courage."

I tried to emulate his cheery mood and succeeded somewhat until we came to the side door, for there we found Jim and Katie waiting for us, each with a small grip packed. Katie's swollen, tear-stained face was filled with resentful sullenness, while her husband's, though free from anger, was still eloquent with dignified disapproval.

"We're going, Mrs. Graham," Jim addressed himself to me. "Katie, here, is all excited like, and I'm going to take her down to my folks until we can find a place. She won't be back, but I'll come back tomorrow. If you like, and help you through with the packing and moving. I'm sorry to leave like this but I don't think we deserved having our home broken up in this way without ever telling us. We expected to stay with you as long as—"

"Why, Jim!" I interrupted. "You must misunderstand. I never meant—"

Dicky interrupted me with a little air of authority which I had seen him display to me but once or twice before.

"Please let me attend to this, my dear," he said quietly, then turned to Jim.

"My dear chap," he said cordially "suppose we talk this over first. Remember I've just got here, and know nothing about this, Katie!" his voice was crisp, peremptory, "go to your room and wait for Jim."

I held my breath, wondering what Katie would do. But after one quickly drawn breath, one long, steady glance at Dicky, she turned on her heel and obeyed him.

THE PORTRAIT, A STORY OF AN OBSESSION—By Kate Dickinson Sweetser

Constantly Before Her, the Almost Speaking Likeness of Her Predecessor Seemed to Mock the Second Wife With a Fixed Stare and Smiling Lips, Then Nature Intervened

(Copyright, 1921, by Public Ledger Co.)

At every meal Helene stood in her accustomed place, watching the bride with merry, mocking eyes, listening to her every word, scorning her when she did not fling appropriate jest or repartee across the table as she, Helene, would have done

GERALD MANLEY'S artistic manner was to pose a subject in as nearly as possible the same place and light as that in which the finished portrait was to hang. He made a careful study of Helene Hamilton and her home background before beginning work on her, and the keynote of his conception of her dominant characteristics was struck when he designed the portrait for the dining room, and posed her in an attitude of ease and grace, leaning one plump elbow on the corner of the white Italian mantel, just below where she was later to hang in perpetual ease and grace. In actual fact, his conception was not complete, for Helene was many-sided, and to doom her for all time to the dining-room mantel was to curtail her ability, and doom all but one of her talents to oblivion.

But Gerald Manley was an autocrat where his work was concerned. The portrait was hung where he decreed, and Helene, goddess of hearth and home, looked down on John Hamilton as he ate his cereal, buttered his toast, sipped his demi-tasse—while Helene, the actual, flashed tantalizing glances across the new mahogany, in competition with that other canvas self.

The original was a delightful combination of sweetness and light, of charm and dignity—the portrait was a compelling likeness of features and spirit. If Helene was anything, she was bewitching, unique. The portrait was Helene—merry eyes, mocking lips, graceful curves of profile and features, and more than that—it was Helene, the ideal, home-maker, mother. The close portrayal of body and spirit was a delight to John Hamilton—and also to Helene's mother, the doting parent of an only child, who could have gazed eternally on reproductions of her darling—as well as to friends, who marveled at the magic of Manley's art, which could so interpret a personality like Helene's.

When Helene the actual was gone from human sight, gone beyond recall of human love or longing, Helene, goddess of hearth and home still hung there in eternal youth and mute mocking, bewitching, human, elusive and his forever. John Hamilton lingered long over his meals, that he might feast on the portrait, and as he looked, the renewed strength and peace to his fevered soul—fortified him to go out into the world again and work, and meet the prying eyes of those who knew.

For over a year, he and the portrait were close comrades. But time loosens all bonds, even those of love, when the human touch is gone. In the second year of his solitude his horizon widened, and soon after village rumor had begun to play battledore and shuttlecock with his name, he announced his engagement to Anna Redmond, Helene's cousin and most intimate friend, who had been a frequent and most welcome guest in the home during Helene's lifetime.

To Helene's mother, who had cared for John Hamilton's comfort and managed his household since her child's death, the engagement was a bitter confirmation of the inconstancy of all male created beings, and she and her belongings at once became conspicuous by their absence. She was abroad at the time of the wedding, and village censure of her was sharp, for the widower had chosen wisely and waited decorously. There could be but one Helene, but Anna's time had come, and the difference between the cousins was so marked that the two wives could not but mark two distinctly different epochs in John Hamilton's life. The second could not encroach on the first. Anna was brown-haired, soft-voiced, placid, sunny and even in temperament. She had but one human ideal, cherished secretly from childhood—John; one love—John; and John was hers now. She felt no jealousy of Helene in retrospect, her hour had come.

But to be matrimonial successor to Helene was no easy matter and required ready wit, special courage, and confidence in one's own ability to charm. Anna did not face the situation; she simply accepted it, and became a fixed star in a sky across which a meteor once had flashed.

Slight evidences of the change of mistresses were evident in the home. Helene's room had been hung with yellow; Anna's was in pink. The Louis Seize boudoir became a den where John and his friends could smoke and discuss business and politics. Anna's seat at the table faced the portrait; Helene's had not.

John was very affectionate, very solicitous to do all, he all that would minister to Anna's comfort and pleasure. He was entirely satisfied with the restful atmosphere of his home, and he loved Anna with a quiet love, a love which she repaid in overflowing measure.

But there was the portrait to be reckoned with, and the reckoning was a heavy one. At every meal, Helene stood in her accustomed place, watching the bride with merry, mocking eyes, listening to her every word, scorning her when she did not fling appropriate jests or repartee across the table as she, Helene, had done. Anna, never original in thought or action, found herself watching Helene for suggestion, for approval, for inspiration. She began to listen for her own silences, to hesitate to voice her own puerile witticisms, even to stammer, under the mockery of that pictured rival, becoming finally so conscious of her own limitations of speech and looks that she was shorn of individuality through desire to imitate. Helene had been a real rose—she, Anna, was a white one. Red was the color John liked best. Oh, the misery of it!

A FUTILE anger possessed her soul that the portrait should so dominate her domain, dwarf her success, cripple her energies, destroy her happiness. She rallied to her own defense, became gay, frivolous, chattering. This was surely not serene, quiet Anna! The newly acquired manner did not appeal to John. Anna detected her defeat and was in despair under the mockery of her successful rival, who now dominated with the hideous entirety of a controlling power.

The obsession was complete. Anna grew pale, lifeless, nervous, without enthusiasm or appetite, and her husband noted the change in her with concern. They were sitting together in the twilight when he spoke of it to her.

"What is it, Dolly?" he asked, putting an arm across her shoulder. "What is the trouble? You are not yourself nowadays."

At first she was firm in her denial, then came the truth. "The portrait, John," she whispered. "The portrait—"

"The portrait—Helene's—what about it?" All the interrogation marks in the vocabulary melted into one, were expressed in John's face and voice.

"It hasn't been injured, Dolly? It hasn't fallen? Quick, tell me!"

Anna shook her head. "Oh, no," she stammered, "no, but, John, it hurts me—She was so—so different—"

There was a note of question, of appeal in the statement which, detected and satisfied, as love alone can satisfy, would have guaranteed eternal calm, but the man was deaf to it.

"I don't understand," he said. "If nothing has happened to the picture, then what can it have to do with your feelings? Of course, Helene was different, but what of that?"

There was a silence. Anna breathed fast and twisted a lock of her hair between thumb and forefinger. John's forehead was wrinkled with the riddle he was trying to read. Suddenly he surmised.

"It can't be you are jealous because she hangs there yet. That wouldn't be worthy of you—poor little Helene!"

The tenderness in his reminiscent tone was a stab in the right place. Anna shivered and drew herself free of his protecting arm.

"No, indeed," she said, proudly, "that would be too absurd, wouldn't it? But, John, tell me, did it never occur to you to take that portrait down before I came?"

John's astonishment was as honest as his nature was direct. "Why certainly not," he answered. "You always said you liked it specially, and you and she were always such chums. Of course not. Why do you ask, Dolly?"

But Anna had congealed, and no attempts to force her further confidence were of any avail. John, completely befogged as to the matter with Anna or the portrait, was obliged to drop the subject—and befogged he remained.

His compromise with intelligence was sternly practiced. He could not understand, but he could propitiate. A motor, new jewelry, the latest books, a trip—these he laid at Anna's feet in place of appreciation. She accepted them with proud and silent grace, while John Hamilton felt that his second wife was not the open book he had supposed.

The obsession of Anna was complete. She was no longer Anna, nor could she be Helene. She was not John's wife—the other was that—she was but a substitute. Rage possessed her soul and the rage that possesses such calm souls as hers is twice as awful in its intensity as that which comes to more spontaneous natures.

On a bright June day, from breakfast hour until the time to dress for John's coming, Anna did not leave the dining room. At times she stood by the mantel, just below that merry, mocking rival; at times she stood before the mirror, looking at her living self, for the rest of the day she sat in her place at the dining table, looking into space. Just before 5 o'clock she rang for the man, and bade him bring the stepladder. Her orders astonished him, for he had not been in John Hamilton's employ for the last five years without knowing the valuation of the portrait. Anna watched him bring it down, fetched a cloth with which to flick the accumulation of dust from its frame, herself enveloped it in netting, then in papers, and followed it to the storeroom, where the hated rival was placed, face to the wall in a dark corner. Then Anna directed the hanging of a Corot, a stunning Braun photograph, over the white Italian mantel. That done, she went to her room, dressed for motoring, and drove to the train to meet her husband.

She was her most attractive self that afternoon, and John Hamilton felt pride in the choice of his wife. He looked affectionately at her and expanded into unusual confidence in the glow of his emotions. That night the dining room was lighted as usual with candles which threw all the room into gloom—the table alone into high light—and John noticed nothing new or unusual in the familiar place.

THE shock was as sharp as a pistol when it came, at breakfast time; when he saw what she had done to him, to Helene, but he said no word. He saw her as white from hair to lips, when his eyes rested first on the Corot, when his lips opened with the words that never came. For an hour it seemed to him, to her, he stood ready to speak. She sat, ready to defend. Then he turned, and without a glance left her, and soon she heard him giving orders about staying in town over-night. Reproach or questions would have been an immense relief—she wished she were a fishwife—a girl of the streets, that she might scream, might brawl, for one unrestrained hour. Would she ever see him again? But she had done what was right, oh, she was right! Now she would go out into the air and sunshine. She was afraid to stay in the house with her thoughts, and with that disgraced other wife, disinherited by her!

Upon her return, Helene's mother met her on the threshold, inside herself with anger; she and her child had been insulted; the insult must be atoned for; Anna must wipe it out by restitution of her child to the place which was hers by prior claim; Anna must apologize.

Anna was white, set, determined. She had done what was right, she said, what common decency demanded should have been done before her coming. She could never apologize—had given no insult. The warfare waged hot and merciless against her, and when John Hamilton returned from the club after forty-eight hours of deliberation as to his course in the matter, he found Helene's mother frenzied beyond the bounds of need or decency, and village gossip busy with an affair which should have been his and Anna's alone.

His decision at the club had been to convince Anna of the great wrong she had done to him and to the cousin who had loved her so dearly in removing the portrait, to make her restore it to its place before he restored her to her place in his affections, but decision often flies through the door when impulse enters. Instead, he took Anna in his arms, in the presence of Helene's mother, and thundered out a decree of protection.

"My wife and I will decide together where it is best to hang your daughter's portrait; together, do you understand? For the sake of that daughter, who never indulged in a petty thought, or in scurrilous gossip to the detriment of a human soul, let this matter be dropped at once, or never enter my house again! This is no concern of yours!"

Such was John Hamilton when face to face with a weaker soul in need of protection—and with a realization of his own possible mistake in judgment. Anna clung to him in relaxed silence, then lifted an entreating face to his. He kissed her, the Corot hung where it had been placed, Helene remained in banishment and Anna's daily life went on as usual. But she grew no less nervous than formerly; the Corot brought no balm to her riotous emotions. Lurking in the shadow of the great, branchless trees, hiding within the thickness of the woodland depths, elusive, mocking, wandered Helene, the very spirit of nature and of beauty. There was no relief to be found now from the agony with which Anna's soul was blistered. Out of sight was doubly in mind and oh, the misery of it!

FOR sixteen long months the portrait remained where Anna had herself placed it, and during every moment of those weary months Anna felt that John had not forgotten, had not forgiven, could never understand, and that she could never feel that she was wrong. But oh, to be a real rose! This was Anna's cry to a listening Providence as she lay sleepless in the long nights, sharing her pillow with that pictured rival.

Then came a time of doubts and fears, and then relief following suspense. Mother and child were doing well. Pacing the floor of his living room, John Hamilton, as if ashamed of being thought effeminate in uttering the words, whispered to himself, "my daughter, my daughter!" And there glistened in his eyes the evidence that a strong man has been touched by the mystery and the bliss of fatherhood.

Anna sent for him at last, and he stood beside her, holding the tiny atom who was his child. Anna looked from the great rugged face of her husband to the tiny one pillowed on his arm, and laid a hand on the baby's head.

"Do you see it, too?" she asked. "You do, don't you?"

The question in his eyes was a mute appeal to her to interpret what he fancied, but dared not voice. She understood his appeal and she answered her own interrogation:

"Yes, Helene; it almost killed me at first, I thought it was my punishment. Now I see it differently. I am glad now. Oh, John—she could never have been—jealous—she would just have loved! I have been remembering—I think she would have given you to me if she could—and I—I took you away from her. If our child has her future, too, it will be a blessing. It will prove that she was a woman and understood—and forgave—John, you do see?"

It was hard for a practical man to follow the working of a woman's instinct, or to see the tiny wrinkled toward as clear a light as she did, but John Hamilton felt rather than saw.

"Yes," he said, "I do. She loved us both, Anna; she has come in the child to reunite us."

That the nurse sent him from the room shortly was no misfortune to either husband or wife. There was nothing more to be said then, except what Anna whispered as he left her:

"Have her put back before I go down-stairs, John. We were always chums, you know. Baby must learn to love her as—as we do."

Angela and I and the Bath Sponge—By George A. Birmingham

A FORTNIGHT ago I received, quite unexpectedly, a sum of money. It was not a large sum. A collier, or even a railway porter, would have regarded it as inconsiderable, but to Angela and me it seemed a delightful windfall. We agreed to spend it in the pleasantest of all ways. I should give Angela a present of something she really wanted. She would give me a present, leaving me to choose what it would be. Angela's present was the more expensive of the two. She chose a hat. But mine was dear, too, surprisingly dear. I had long wanted a bath sponge, a really large, an enormous sponge. Years ago I saw a sponge of the sort I wanted, about the size of a small hat box. The very rich man who owned it had left it in the bathroom of the house in which I was staying. Ever since I laid eyes on it I longed, but almost hopelessly, for one like it.

WE SPENT a day in town buying our presents. The morning was devoted to Angela's hat. After lunch we started at the stores and visited six other shops in pursuit of the largest possible sponge. We carried it and the hat home in triumph. That night we laid the sponge in soak and next morning I used it for the first time. It really was very, almost inconveniently, large.

Angela, who takes her bath after me, told me at breakfast that I had not squeezed out the sponge properly.

"I looked at it," she said, "and it was half full of water. It will be ruined if you don't squeeze it out well every morning."

"I did my best," I said.

"The fact is," said Angela, "that sponge is far too large. No one could squeeze it out properly. A sponge half the size would be far better."

Angela's own sponge is much less than half the size. I felt that she was a little jealous of mine; which was not nice of her. I had not disparaged her hat.

At luncheon Angela returned to the subject of the sponge in a tiresome, almost a nagging, way. She said it would not fit into the sponge tray and lay about, making the bathroom very untidy, adding that she could not imagine what any one wanted with a sponge that size.

"If it was half as big as it is, it would be quite as useful," said Angela, "and not half so troublesome."

"Perhaps," I said, "you'd like to cut it in two."

She said nothing in reply; but I could see she thought the sponge would be much better if it were cut in half. Then no doubt she could have got half of it instead of the miserable, ragged little thing she uses. I felt aggrieved. After all I had not suggested chopping up her hat.

"It seems a pity," I said coldly, "to cut up a sponge like that. It cost——"

"I know what it cost," said Angela.

"And that," I said, "was a pre-war price. The man said so. If you bought a sponge like that at the present price—well, it would take a millionaire to do it."

I took an extra bath that evening by way of showing that I really appreciated my sponge. That irritated Angela and she complained afterward that it was actually dripping over the bathroom floor.

"Unless you can manage to squeeze it out," she said, "it will be utterly ruined, and we will die sleuth on the floor."

I did my best to squeeze out the sponge next morning, but it was very difficult. I began to think that only men with exceptionally strong hands ought to own large sponges. But I did not admit that to Angela. On the contrary, I looked into the bathroom a couple of times during the morning to admire the sponge.

THAT afternoon a terrible thing happened. The sponge was cut in two, and one-half of it disappeared. I was deeply grieved and hurt. I should not have believed beforehand that Angela could have been capable of such an abominable action. The waste of money was bad enough, for the two halves were not, of course, worth a quarter of the price of the whole sponge. But apart from that it was a mean thing to do. I was pleased with that sponge and was learning to love it. I wonder what Angela would say if I cut the feathers out of her hat and used them for cleaning my pipe. I felt the thing so deeply that I did not say a word about it. Nor did Angela, and I knew she was ashamed of herself, for she concealed the half sponge she had taken from me. She used it privately, no doubt, but she never left it where I could see it.

For two days there was a silent coldness between me and Angela. I would not speak of the sponge and I could not talk about anything else when my mind was full of the disaster. Then, next day, Angela burst into my study just before luncheon.

"I've found the other half of your sponge," she said, "in the cook's bedroom."

"Angela," I said, "why did you cut it in two?"

"You silly old fool," she said, "I didn't cut it! Do you mean to say you thought I did?"

"After all you said about it being too large," I said, "and being better if it was half the size, I naturally thought—but if it was really the cook—"

"I'd just as soon cut your head in half," said Angela, "and I've sacked the cook on the spot, without a month's notice."

That convinced me that Angela was really sympathetic. It took her three months to get that cook, and she may never be able to get another.

Simple Deduction

"SAW Mr. and Mrs. Bangs going to church this morning."

"Did she have on a new hat?"

"Why, I think not."

"Then I must drop in and see poor old Bangs."

"What's the idea?"

"Why, if they were going to church, and she hadn't on a new hat, he's had another bad attack of heart trouble."

One From the Gallery

AN AMERICAN who formerly lived in Paris says that during the Napoleonic craze of some years ago he attended a Napoleon play at the Odeon.

In this play one act hinged on the birth of the little king of Rome. If the child was a girl one cannon shot was to be fired; if a boy, two shots.

On the night in question a cannon shot rolled forth, and there ensued a long silence on the stage.

"It is a girl," said Josephine, tensely.

But just then a second shot was heard, and the empress cried:

"No; a boy, a boy!"

Now, through some error, a third cannon shot thundered forth. In the enhanced pause that followed a genius in the gallery shouted:

"Parbleu, it's triplets!"

A Remarkable Home Treatment Given by One Who Had It

I tried remedy after remedy, but such relief as I obtained was only temporary. Finally, I found a treatment that cured me completely and such a pitiful condition has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, even bedridden, some of them seventy to eighty years old, and the results were the same as in my own case.

GARIS' BEDTIME STORIES

UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE SHIVERY BIRD.

[BY HOWARD R. GARIS.]
[Copyright 1921, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.]

"Well," said Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy one day, as she looked out of the hollow stump bungalow, "I am afraid spring is never coming! It is almost as cold as when winter was here."

"Yes," agreed Uncle Wiggily, as he looked sideways down his pink, twinkling nose, "it is rather cold out. But still that need not stop me from going to look for an adventure. I have my warm fur coat."

"Well, if you are going out," said the muskrat lady housekeeper, "I wish you would bring me a roll of cotton from the eight and nine cent store. I think I'll make a new bed quilt, for we may have cold weather a long time yet."

"That's so," agreed the bunny gentleman. "Well, I'll get you two rolls of warm cotton and you can make two bed quilts, for I was shivery myself last night. Though tomorrow is the first of April, and it ought to be warm, with April showers soon coming to bring May flowers."

"And you want to watch that you aren't fooled on April the first," laughed Nurse Jane, shaking her paw at the bunny uncle, who, taking his tall, silk hat, hopped away to the three and four cent store.

It was rather colder in Woodland near the Orange Ice Mountain than Uncle Wiggily liked, and even with his fur coat he shivered. But when he had bought the two rolls of warm, fluffy cotton, and held them against his pink nose, he did not feel so cold.

Uncle Wiggily was hopping along, thinking how glad he would be when summer came when, all of a sudden, as he passed under a tree, the bunny uncle heard a voice saying:

"I'm not going to stay here! I'm sorry I came up from the warm and sunny South! It is too shivery here! I'm going back!"

Uncle Wiggily looked up in the tree and saw a Blue Bird, and the Blue Bird was shivering so that it made the tree branch tremble.

"What's the matter, Blue Bird?" called up the bunny.

"I'm so shivery-livery!" was the answer. "I came up from the South thinking I would find summer here, but it is so cold I'm going to fly back!"

The bird put it on.

"Oh, don't do that!" begged Uncle Wiggily. "With you here, my dear Blue Bird it looks as though summer had come. If you go away Jack Frost may slide back and we'll have winter again."

"I know, my dear Uncle Wiggily," chirped the bird. "I would like to stay here and make it seem like summer, but I can not shiver. All my feathers might fall out! I haven't a warm fur coat like you."

"Ha! That makes me think of something!" exclaimed the bunny gentleman. "If you had something warm to wear over your feathers, could you stay until the weather did get real warm?"

"Way, yes, I'pose I could," said the Blue Bird, anxious to please. "But where can I get something warm to wear?"

"From this cotton!" cried Uncle Wiggily, holding up the rolls he had bought for Nurse Jane to make into bed quilts. "Come to my hollow stump bungalow and Miss Fuzzy Wuzzy will make you a warm, fluffy, cotton overcoat. Then you will shiver no more!"

"Well, that sounds nice, at any rate," chirped the Blue Bird. "I'll try it!"

So Uncle Wiggily hopped along the ground, and the Blue Bird flitted from tree to tree, until the hollow stump bungalow was reached.

"Hello, Nurse Jane!" cried Uncle Wiggily, hopping up the steps and holding open the door for his friend. "Here is a sure sign of spring—the first Blue Bird! But he is so cold and shivery that you must make him a warm overcoat."

"The idea!" laughed the muskrat lady. "Whoever heard of a Blue Bird wearing a cotton jacket?"

"It does seem queer, I know," said the bird. "But I had rather look funny than shiver. Please make me a coat, Nurse Jane."

So the muskrat lady took some cloth, blue in color, to match the Blue Bird's wings, and the muskrat made a little coat. This she lined with warm, fluffy cotton, and when the bird put it on, and went out in the last cold wind of March, he didn't shiver a bit.

"Hurray!" cried Uncle Wiggily. "Now you'll stay, will you not? You won't fly back down South now, will you?"

"No," answered the Blue Bird. "Thanks to you I no longer shiver." And he stayed near the hollow stump bungalow, and other birds, seeing him, also stayed when Nurse Jane made them warm, fluffy cotton coats.

But this is the end of my story.

SPRING IS COMING— TAKE GUDE'S PEPTO-MANGAN

Thousands of People Take It Every Spring To Regain Health and Fight Illness.

MAKES BLOOD RICH AND RED

Helps To Build Up the Entire Human System with Life-Giving Oxygen.

In the Springtime, after a winter sickness or long days pent up indoors, the blood becomes clogged with waste matter. The little red corpuscles in your blood become inferior. They do not absorb enough oxygen when they pass through the lungs. The tiny cells, billions of them, miss the nourishing effect of the oxygen, and faces become pale, bodies weak.

If you feel out of sorts, cranky, tired out most of the time, it is probably because your blood is weak and you need the help that Gude's Pepto-Mangan, the well known Spring blood tonic, gives.

Gude's Pepto-Mangan makes rich red blood and puts new life into the red corpuscles. If you are anemic—a thin-blooded condition—Gude's Pepto-Mangan will restore the right number of red corpuscles. You will notice a general improvement, better appetite, more restful sleep, better complexion, wide-open clear eyes.

Get Gude's Pepto-Mangan at your druggist's. He has it in liquid and tablet form. It makes no difference which you take, because the tablets and liquid form both have the same medicinal value. Get the genuine Gude's Pepto-Mangan with the full name, "Gude's Pepto-Mangan," printed on the package.—Advertisement.

JUBILEE'S PARDNER

by Judd Mortimer Lewis

Illustrations by Edwins

When I woke up this morning I gave Jubilee the hug of his life. I am not ever going to be afraid of any fella that comes up to me any more. It was raining when I let him down by the rope in his teeth, but it was a warm kind of a rain, and I felt good when I got out in it on my way to milk the cow and her dotter. I wish they had more sense so that when I get to be the champeen prize fighter they could tell the other cows that they used to know me when I wore short pants and that I was a good fighter even then. But you can't expect much from a cow.

When we was eating breakfast my father asted my grandfather if he remembered that he said March was going out like a lion and my grandfather said there was time yet, and my father said that he mebby meant a sea lion and then everybody but me laughed at my grandfather. If I had laughed at him I would probly got licked.

I heard a noise in Mr. Farrels yard and climb up on the fence in the rain and he was doing something to his auto and was calling him all the things he could think of, and when he kept still a minute I asted him if I should tell my grandfather to come over, and he asted me if my grandfather knew anything about autos and I said he didn't but that he was the best gweeser I had ever heard, and he said he could do his own swearing.

We all went to school in the rain and we were all sopping wet, but the teacher did not tell any of us to go home and get dry.

We all went to school in the rain and we were all sopping wet, but the teacher did not tell any of us to go home and get dry. She was in the war in the Are Gone and is used to seeing fellas all wet. All of the fellas hoorawed Nibs all day, and when we was going home and it had stopped raining Banty said all at once, "Oh, here comes Fishmouth!" and Nibs ran half a block before he looked around and saw that he was being hoorawed. It kinda made me jump and look around when he said it, too. I bet Fishmouth won't munky around where I am any more.

When I got home my mother was trying on a new hat which she had got and my ant said it was not becoming to her, and when my father got home he asted her why she could not wait to the first to get it, and then she said she was not going to keep it anyhow and she would take it back in the morning and pick out another one. And then all at once the front door blowed open and a cold wind came in, and my ant looked out and said, "My goodness, it is snowing," and father said to my grandfather that there was his lion, and my grandfather got up and went out in the yard on his game leg and looked up in the sky and wiggled his whiskers and acted like he felt pretty good. I guess mebbe he knows something after all.

KIWANIS O. K. Y. M. C. A. MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Which Is To Be Staged in City Next Week.

A MASTER SALESMAN IS DISCUSSED BY BECKWITH

Clevelander Chief Speaker at Weekly Noon-Day Luncheon of Kiwanis Today.

Qualities a man must possess in order to attain the position of master salesman were outlined by Ansel E. Beckwith, of Cleveland, investment securities salesman in a very interesting address at the weekly noon luncheon of the Marion Kiwanis club in the private dining room of the Busy Bee cafeteria today when next week's Y. M. C. A. membership campaign was endorsed. Members of the Marion Advertising club were guests.

Mr. Beckwith likened the master salesman to a wheel and the qualities such a salesman must possess to the spokes of a wheel. These spokes he named, sincerity, honesty, reliability, knowledge of his line, energy and perseverance and loyalty to the firm he represents. "Plain hard work, intelligently applied is the basis for success in salesmanship," Mr. Beckwith stated. He termed salesmanship the ability to represent the selling end of a firm to establish a connection based on confidence and square dealing. A real salesman, he asserted, is one who can fit his goods to the customers needs and then make the customer see those requirements. In conclusion Mr. Beckwith recited the salesman's creed, which incorporated all of the essential qualities enumerated in his talk.

Message from Cleveland

Mr. Beckwith brought a message from the Cleveland Kiwanis club and stated the Cleveland organization is looking forward to a large attendance of the Kiwanis International convention from all parts of the country and especially from the Ohio district.

The club voted to lend its influence to the membership campaign of the Y. M. C. A. which is to be conducted Tuesday. James E. Phillips announced that the trustees had decided upon a plan of asking 100 or more men to give a full day to the work of the campaign and after the endorsement of the club interviewed the members to secure workers. Mr. Phillips stated that the matter had already been presented to the chamber of commerce and about thirty-five men have already pledged themselves to work one day in the campaign.

Today's silent boost, furnished by E. H. Coman, was awarded to Borchard Critchfield. Representatives of the club, following the luncheon, attended the meeting in the interests of the home for the Marion County Federation of Women's clubs.

Ammonia Tank Lets Go at Mt. Gilead Today.

TWO PEOPLE "GASSED;" OTHERS HIT BY DEBRIS

Millinery Store Adjoining Meat Market, Scene of Explosion, Is Damaged.

Mt. Gilead, O., March 31.—[special]—Too high a pressure on one of the tanks in an ammonia cooler in the James & Whitney meat market caused an explosion this morning about 10 o'clock, blowing out the front and rear brick walls of the two-story building, which was owned by William Van Atta. Several people were injured and the loss will be heavy, with partial insurance.

The brick wall connecting the meat market with Howard & Bierlett's millinery store, was also wrecked and Mrs. Clara Allison, an employe of the millinery store was badly injured when flying bricks cut deep gashes in her face. Mrs. Peter Ryan, the trimmer was cut about the face and Mrs. J. W. Howard was gassed.

Herbert Kolb, who conducted a cream station at the meat market, had his right hand badly cut by broken glass and Frank Bowers who was in bed in his room on the upper floor was gassed.

The rear wall of the upper floor of the building occupied by the meat market was blown out and the windows in the south end of the White House drygoods store, two store rooms beyond, were broken by the force of the explosion.

Of these 102 it said, 45 were in the eastern, 16 in the southern and 45 in the western districts. This compares, it was added with 32 which failed to earn expenses and taxes in December.

HAS A REPLACEMENT FUND IN READINESS

Great Britain Would Retain World Naval Leadership.

London, March 31.—While the British naval program has been cut, the admiralty has taken pains to see that Britain will retain naval leadership. Her geographical position, her widespread colonies and new duties imposed by the war make this necessary, it was explained. In response to the clamor for retrenchment, the admiralty devised a budget which appears smaller than heretofore. It also agreed no new superdreadnoughts are to be constructed and that eight dreadnoughts are to be scrapped. Parliamentary debate, however, has brought the admission that a 2,500,000 pound "replacement fund" is intended as a "nest egg." It was pointed out that even with a reduction in construction and with America increasing her navy, Great Britain can retain superiority for a number of years.

"Marion's Greatest Store for Men and Boys"

And In Boys' Clothes —

"How are you able to do it?" exclaimed one mother in surprise, when we showed her a smart suit for $10 with two pairs of pants—in the same identical pattern that she had seen elsewhere at $15—with one pair.

It's no secret how we do it, folks—or that we are doing it.

We are not paying less—we are taking less profit.

We are not charging all we could—we are increasing our business all we can.

And as long as we can keep up the stream of new customers that walked into our store for Boys' Clothes the past week—we're going to give you values that will surprise you.

"The Boys' Store"

No "Buyer's Strike" Here — There's No Need For One!

The New Spring Goods Are In And At The Right Prices. Come And See!

From a number of the larger cities—yes, and some of the smaller towns, too—come stories of "buyers' strikes." People refuse to pay unasked-for prices for unvouched-for qualities—and you can't blame them. Prices are down, and people expect the merchants to mark their goods according to today's value, regardless of what they cost—and they should, as their share in bringing things back to normal. You don't have to wait for that here.

Marionites are more fortunate. At a recent meeting of representative Marionites, one of the men present, who is acquainted with many kinds of business and a keen observer, made the statement that after a careful comparison in a number of cities in this section, he found that prices generally, in most lines of business, were lower in Marion than in any other place he had recently visited. We were pleased to hear that. We knew it was true in the clothing business—at least at "The Men's Store." People who came here from other cities have told us—and bought.

"That's the way to stop a buyers' strike!" exclaimed another member of the group who is connected with one of the local shops. "I went into a local clothing store the other day with a ten dollar bill, expecting to buy only a shirt; but what I did buy was a shirt and a new hat and two suits of underwear and some collars—and I got one dollar and some cents change back out of the ten besides. Since then I've broken a number of little "buyers' strikes" by telling them about that!" You can do the same at the same place. It was Kleinmaier's.

But price is not the only thing. There is plenty of cheaply made "bargain" merchandise on the market now, but that is not what people want. They want simon-pure, good old fashioned, dependable quality and they want to know that they will get their money's worth for every cent they spend. That's what you'll find at "The Men's Store" when you're ready. Come and see.

CALEDONIA LEGIONERS ARE TO GIVE BANQUET

It Will Be Served in the Pythian Hall—Notes.

Caledonia, O., March 31.—(Special.)—The members of the American legion will hold a banquet in the Knights of Pythias hall, Saturday evening. The Ladies' Aid society of Memorial M. E. church will serve the supper.

Little Miss Ruth Dice, who has been ill of typhoid fever, suffered a relapse last week.

Ten members were received in the Memorial M. E. church at the regular Easter service, Sunday morning. At the evening service, Rev. John Green closed a service of evangelistic services which had extended over a period of three weeks. A very impressive service was held on Good Friday afternoon. The hours from 1 until 4 were devoted to meditation and prayer with communion services during the entire time. Mrs. C. G. Underwood and Mrs. Robert Williams presided at the pipe organ during the service.

A number of college students spent their Easter vacation with their parents. Among them were Paul Fell, of Oberlin; Mildred Baker, of Ada; Margaret Lyon and Homer Busch, of Delaware; Miss Nell Lorah, of Cleveland, and Miss Mary Dickerson, of Harrison county, students at Delaware, spent their vacation with the former's sister, Mrs. John Green, at the M. E. parsonage.

Mr. and Mrs. William Field celebrated the forty-fifth anniversary of their marriage, Wednesday, by entertaining a party of relatives. An elaborate three-course dinner was served, the favors and decorations being pink and white. Covers were laid for Mrs. Ida Miller, of Cardington; Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Patton, Mrs. Sylvester Patton and son, Claude, and Homer Fehl and son, Ralph, of Edison. Mr. and Mrs. Field were married, March 30, 1876, at the bride's home near Denmark. They spent all their married life in this vicinity. They have one son, Harry Field, who with his wife and son reside in Seattle, Washington. Of the twenty-seven guests at Mr. and Mrs. Field's wedding, only seven are now living. The couple are enjoying good health at their comfortable home on south Water street.

James Campbell, who conducted the Lalpply meat market, is ill of typhoid fever.

Powers, Pierson City Mayor.

FUNERALS

Ramer Funeral Friday.

The funeral of Mrs. Harry L. Ramer will be held Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the residence, No. 717 south Prospect street. Dr. L. L. Strock will conduct the services and burial will be made in the Marion cemetery. Friends can view the remains this evening from 7 to 9 o'clock and Friday morning from 9 to 11 o'clock.

Delaware Cars Collide.

A city street car, driven by Lester Zimmer, was smashed up shortly before 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, when a C. D. & M. interurban car, piloted by Dan Jones, charshed into it in west Lincoln avenue, near Campbell street. No one was hurt, although the vestibule of the city car was smashed. Failure of the air brakes to operate on the interurban car is said to have been the cause of the accident. The C. D. and M. car suffered a slightly damaged front.—Delaware Gazette.

Waters Subside.

Waters of the Scioto river, at Riversides, north of Prospect, subsided during the night, after reaching a height of three inches above the C., D. & M. tracks. The current of the stream is on a straight-away and moves slowly, creating no danger. No damage was done to the roadbed and service was not impaired.
